Activities of Women

The leading divorce center of the United States is now in Seattle, Wash., where during the last year more than 2,500 divorces were granted.

Statistics show that women in the ratio of about one to every nine are now employed in the industries formerly employing chiefly or exclusively men.

More than 48 per cent of immigrants from Italy during the past year were women. This is an increase of nearly 25 per cent over the pre-war period.

Before the war the five principal women employing industries were the textile, food, tobacco, and hand and footwear.

In Siam many women are employed in the army workshops, in factories, and on the railways and roads, where they are paid the same rates as men for equal work.

More than 77 per cent of the 502 firms questioned by the national industrial board report satisfactory results from the experiment in the employment of female labor.

Entertains at Bridge. Mrs. J. T. Kelley entertained four tables of bridge at her home Tuesday afternoon.

My Marriage Problems

Adelle Garrison's New Phase of "REVELATIONS OF A WIFE"

The Way Fred "Cheered Up" His Anxious Father.

I never have counted myself a lawless person, instead, in my retrospective moments I have felt that I was almost too matter-of-fact and possessed of too strict a Puritan conscience, the characteristics in me at which Dicky most frequently gibes. But at Mr. Cosgrove's command to go slowly past the corner where he suspected the state trooper was hiding to watch us, I felt a thrill at which might animate a Raffles were the police on his trail.

"True, I had the justification of knowing that it was no very grave offense of which we were guilty—there could be no possible harm from an innocent night-fishing excursion to the reservoir. But the necessity for stealth, for evading an officer of the law, gave zest to the experience of which I was ashamed, even while I was guiltily conscious of reveling in it.

Reducing the speed of the car materially from the very moderate pace it had been traveling, we crept past the corner, and I had hard work to keep from turning my head to see if Mr. Cosgrove's prediction as to the whereabouts of the officer was correct, and I was fascinatingly thrilled by the big man's sharp whispered command with more than a trace of annoyance in it.

"Don't turn your head, Miss Dean! Do you want to give the whole show away? Keep up this pace, Mrs. Graham, then we can watch from back here. See anything, boys?"

I knew from the sounds back of me that the twins had twisted themselves into human jack-knives, and were engaged in peering into the road back of them. For a second or two that seemed endless there was no reply from either of them. Then from both boys came the exclamation:

"There he is!" But there was no sound of a popping motorcycle, and I marvelled how the boys could tell where the man was.

"He hasn't started his engine yet," Ted said. "He wants to wait until we're far enough ahead so we won't hear it. But he's watching us sure as shooting, and he's going to find out where we're off to if it takes him all night."

Bess Dean twisted in her seat, cautiously, with evident remembrance of the caustic rebuke Mr. Cosgrove had administered.

"How on earth can you see him?" she demanded with a note of incredulous admiration in her voice, which, whether conscious or unconscious, evidently much gratified the vanity of impressionable Ted.

"Why, I just kept my eye upon that beam of light from Hinchell's kitchen," Ted returned, with a bit of boyish braggadocio in his voice.

"It shined clear across the road, and he had to cross it. When I saw the shadow appear on that I knew he was there. Of course, he could have gone a long way around through the field and come out this side of it, but I guess he didn't think of it, or else he was in too much of a hurry. We'd better scoot along, Pa. He won't follow us until he's sure we can't hear his engine starting."

The Reason Ted Knew. "Well I call it mighty clever to keep track of him like that!" Bess Dean's comment sounded genuine enough.

I guess that Ted's boyish cheeks were flushing with pride at the praise from the girl whom he had followed like an admiring clumsy puppy from the hour of her arrival. It only added to my count against the girl, for I had seen the many little wiles by which she had encouraged the boy's admiration until it bade fair to become an infatuation.

She had exercised the same petty trick upon the other twin, but Fred was of a more phlegmatic temperament, and I had heard his mother say that "Fred would trade the prettiest girl in the world for a good string of trout." Ted, however, was Bess Dean's thrill, bound by so many silken cords of country that they were like an iron band for holding power, and I felt that the experience would do the boy no harm, yet I resented it because of his mother.

But I had no time for dwelling upon Bess Dean's misdeeds. Ted's suggestion that we "scoot along" translated itself into action in my foot resting on the gas, and I sent the car along the road at the greatest speed I dared. But always, as we went, keeping the same general distance behind us, came the motorcycle of the state trooper, and with equal regularity the speculations of the twins and their father concerning the officer.

"I didn't see him close enough to recognize him," Pa Cosgrove said. "Have either of you got any idea who he is?"

"He looked a little bit like Hen Crowley from over Shadskan way," Fred said, "but I couldn't be sure. But don't worry." His voice was a cynical drawl: "You'll have chance enough to see who he is before this night's over."
