MRS. AND MRS. R. B. HOWELL, who have been abroad six weeks, returned to Omaha Saturday morning. They visited in England, France, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, Austria, Hungary and Germany.

Mrs. Howell enjoyed most a trip through the Austrian Tyrol. It was a gorgeous day, she said, and the colorings were wonderful. Mrs. Howell had been in Switzerland before but not in the Tyrol. She is a lover of the out-of-doors, so much so that she bridged every minute spent in the shops of Paris, where the average traveler is usually strongly attracted. Prices of many things were marvelously low she found. Dress goods were less in price than they are here, but in many cases were of inferior quality. The 60 per cent duty added to purchases, makes them less of a bargain than they seem at first blush.

Berlin and Dresden, where she had been before, were of especial interest to Mrs. Howell. Dresden, beautiful on the Elbe, she found still medieval, not commercial, not modern like Berlin.

The orchestras in the music centers abroad are perfect, according to Mrs. Howell. She saw Lohengrin in Berlin and a beautiful performance of "Carmen" in Vienna. The only regret of her trip, is that she was away when the Tuesday Musical club, of which she has been president, and is a member, presented the Scotti Opera company. Mrs. C. W. Axtell sent her clippings about the opera which reached her in Rotterdam. Erka Morini, who appears here December 8, under Tuesday Musical auspices, was sailing from Europe about the time the Howells left.

Breakfast Manners Show the Real Person

They say that a chain is only as strong as its weakest link; and if this truth applies to the chain of manners, then we are no better bred than we would indicate by the way we behave at breakfast in the bosom of our own family. For every one of our breakfast manners are his worst and a good many people forget that manners, like charity, begin at home. There are some otherwise very well-mannered persons who simply can't show much courtesy of consideration at breakfast. They are so constituted physically that they come to breakfast in a sort of a daze and don't really enter into the morning meal. From such persons an extra effort is required if they would strengthen this weakest link.

The Morning Greeting.

In homes where attention is paid to the cultivation of good manners children are taught to greet their parents at the breakfast table with a "Good morning, father," or "Good morning, mother." Needless to say the parents so addressed should answer as courteously to the child. There is nothing more discouraging to the cultivation of good manners than the appearance at breakfast of members of the family in sloppy attire and morning disarray. To be sure, among women of wealth and leisure whose negligee attire is as fastidiously attended to as is their dress for the opera, albeit more easily donned—the practice prevails of appearing at the breakfast table in matinee attire, and they even wear dainty lace caps if they choose.

But for the woman of many servants to do this is one thing, and for the woman who needs must be down stairs in the kitchen betimes to prepare the breakfast it is quite another thing. If there is one thing more than another that tends to discourage the cultivation of courteous family breakfast manners it is the appearance at that time of a carelessly doped elderdown breakfast jacket or other negligee that has been doing service in the kitchen and a cap that indicates too plainly that it is donned to conceal unkempt locks. For the woman who must do her own breakfast getting the only correct dress for breakfast is a neat house dress.

As a Guest.

Even the woman of leisure enough to do justice to a negligee breakfast attire would not think of appearing thus dressed were she the guest at another person's house where breakfast was served with the entire family. A possible exception might be made in favor of a woman of very mature years who appeared very well in this kind of apparel. But for an older woman to appear without her equipment of coiffure is certainly a mistake. Her hair should be as neatly if not as elaborately arranged as for dinner.

Save with very intimate friends the hostess does not appear in breakfast negligee when there are guests in her house. The young girl never is allowed the privilege even in the intimacy of her own family circle.

Say You Slept Well.

One thing that you should remember when a guest at a friend's breakfast table. You will probably be asked how you passed the night. Now, don't imagine for an instant that this is to be taken as an invitation for you to tell just how much or how little you slept. If you had odd dreams occasioned by sleeping in a strange bed you had better keep them to yourself. A simple "Very well, thank you," is quite enough answer to this courteous inquiry.

Jewels That Suit the Face

Every bit of jewelry nowadays is chosen with special regard to the frock and face with which it is to be worn, so that it may complete a picture.

Fortunately the day when only the intrinsic worth of one's jewels was considered is gone.

Nowadays about the only time we quote dollars and cents when we consider jewelry is when a holdup man or burglar walks off with our heirlooms or when a moving picture actress still in her struggling days gains some publicity leaving a $50,000 necklace in a taxicab.

But our eyes are trained nowadays to seek the type of jewelry that goes with the frock and face of its wearer. That doesn't mean, of course, that sometimes nothing is so effective as diamonds and pearls. But it does mean that a plain cheap gewgaw gives far more pleasure to the eye than a jewel that might cost a king's ransom—more than that, for one imagines that kings' ransoms have gone down with the exchange rates of rubles and marks.

Many Headresses.

The Paris openings have brought out some interesting things so far as jewelry is concerned. One is that headresses of all sorts will be worn. How far American women will take them up nobody knows. But at all events they are in good style and have already been experimented with and seem to be gaining ground.

In France this year there is a new type of nouveau riche, people who made their money in the war. They seem to exceed the well known and much maligned American, Mr. and Mrs. Newly Rich, in their desire for display and ostentation. They, of course, overdo the matter of costly headresses.

But, on the other hand, the most conservative of the well-dressed women are going in for headresses of some sort or other.

Young girls choose very often strands of crystals of white and color to band about their brows. Then there are jeweled fillets of Grecian type that are also worn by the young. For the older woman, and the younger woman, too, for she always adopts what she thinks is too old for her in these days, there are elaborate feathered headresses that would have graced the locks of a storied princess of the ancient Orient. Towering ostrich feathers are held to the head with bands of jeweled net or with a twisted rope of pearl embroidered tissue.

The scarf that is embroidered in sequins or pearl and crystal beads or that is made of finest gauze brocaded in velvet figures is sometimes wound about the head and tied over one ear, or wound about and fastened under a jeweled ornament with pendant tassels to the shoulder.

Earrings Everywhere.

Earrings are quite as widespread in France as are headresses. And here, again, does the desire for something appropriate overcome the desire for something intrinsically valuable. For many of the earrings are made of jet, and more of onyx. Onyx, indeed, is tremendously in the vogue. The big circle earrings are perhaps considered smartest at the moment. These are sometimes made of beaten gold, like gypsy earrings, and sometimes of onyx or some other stone. The new frocks still make use of stones of various sorts for trimming. That odd and distinctive new second empire neckline that consists of a band about the top of the arms and across the neck, straight around the figure—that off the shoulder line—from which a frock cut in inverted points or draped in arch shaped inverted Us is hung, makes use of rhinestones or other crystals for the band that is the keynote of the frock.

FASHION'S BLUE BOOK

By CORINNE LOWE.

New York.—(Special Correspondence.)—From all accounts, blue serge is having a hard time of it in Paris.

There it doesn't seem to take a much more active part in life than the pug dog or the high wheeled bicycle. Everything almost is kasha, that cashmere finished material which puts the cash in kasha and takes it away from us.

Callot, for example, substitutes for her navy serge frock of last year a kasha in that same tint exposed to the same allover embroidery in the same colorings. With this she uses a squirrel collar crossed fichu fashion, and adding a little more expense to a costly model.

Over here, however, we cling to our provincial navy serges and Poiret twills. Recognizing our fidelity, some of the French designers have sent for our guidance a number of stunning models in these fabrics, many of which are trimmed with braid. It will probably be a long time, in fact, before the average American woman foregoes her allegiance to what has assumed almost the dignity of a national costume.

We are showing today a stunning model of black satin and navy Poiret twill embroidered in silver and national blue.

Opportunity.

Master of human desires am I, Fame, love and fortune on my footsteps wait. Cities and fields I walk; I penetrate Deserts and seas remote, and passing by Hovel and mart an opalace, soon or late, I knock unbidden once at every gate. If sleeping, awake! If feasting, rise before I turn away! It is the hour of fate, And they who follow me reach the state Mortals desire, and conquer every foe. Save leath; but those who doubt or hesitate. Condemned to failure, penury and woe. Seek me in vain and uselessly implore. I answer not and I return no more!
