A Personal Privilege

Pointing out that "Politeness is a civic duty," the Cleveland Plain Dealer says:

"If visitors are treated with courtesy by salesmen in the stores they patronize, if the questions they ask of pedestrians or of traffic officers are answered as if it is a pleasure to impart information to strangers, if street car conductors, hotel clerks and taxi drivers remember that civility is not only a personal grace, but a civic asset as well, these thousands will return to their homes ready to sing the praises of the city and to come again when opportunity offers. It is worth while, any way one looks at it."

Then there's another way of looking at it. Courtesy pays not so much for the good it does the other fellow, as for the good it does to the one who habitually practices it. The chronic grouch punishes himself. The one who makes it a point to be courteous to all with whom he comes in contact finds himself necessarily cultivating a serene state of thought and profits by it. He profits by it with respect to his business affairs, but he finds his larger recompense in the happiness that continually flows into the lives of well-poised men.

A young girl who is in love with life and bubbling over with joy turned from the cordial greetings she had drawn from a crowd of young and old and exclaimed to a friend: "Don't you just love folks?" It was not difficult for her to be kind and courteous. With her it was a habit faithfully cultivated. It paid her in the friendships it won for her. Moreover it provided her with that attitude toward life which insures happiness to those who maintain it.

Politeness, then, is not only a civic duty, but it is a personal privilege. Whether it be displayed by peasant or king, in cottage or mansion, in workshop, in counting room or in the crowded wayfares of a city, it pays. Fortunate, indeed, is the man, woman or child who understands WHY it pays and how BIG it pays.
