What's What

At its best, table talk is one of the most stimulating of social enjoyments. That is why even more care should be taken in selecting the dinner guests than in composing the dinner menu. People accept invitations chiefly for the sake of harmonious social intercourse; if it were solely a question of food they could dine more conveniently at home. And they should not come unless they are prepared to contribute their share to the entertainment; it is not sufficient to be well dressed for the occasion; their conversation should be finer than the fashion of their garments.

Experienced hostesses and diners keep the chat ball rolling lightly along until the (one-time) wine-and-walnuts stage which marks the climax, the brilliant conclusion of "the feast of reason and the flow of soul." People who are not naturally witty sometimes brighten themselves up with good effect by reading a witty new book (or a world-forgotten old one) before dining out, for an apt and fresh quotation is the next best thing to an original bonnet. Also, it serves to toss the ball among the wits present, of whom, we may thank our stars, are usually enough to make life worth living and dinner worth discussing.

Problems That Perplex

IN a world peopled so largely by sophisticated youngsters jazing around until all hours of the night, it's amazing to get a letter like the one I quoted from the fact that "How I wish there was someone who could do something for me. I am heart broken. Mother and father are very strict with me, when it comes to going out alone or with friends. I'm not allowed to go anywhere but to work, shopping, library or other necessary places."

"Is this life at all? I'm so tired of living, I do wish something would happen to change it all. It hurts me so to see my friends enjoy life and then tell me of all their adventures, while I—oh, Miss Fairfax, you ought to know how a girl in my place feels. I'm considered good looking and have a pleasant disposition."

"I'm sure that if I had a little liberty life would turn out to be worth living. Mother will not hear of it. Many a time I have cried myself sick for having had to refuse invitations which would have made me happy."

"I do hope you will think of a way which would make life more pleasant for me, because now it's nothing but misery. Anxious."

My dear, you think you're being plunged into the things which only mature folks can handle and endure. Late hours, sophisticated talk, bold and daring customs and habits are all part of youth's way of doing things now. It takes mature judgment and experience to know what's dangerous and what only a bit absurd. Youth is so eager that it's likely to be swept along by the current. And when a group of vital, animated young people without standards and

Boys and girls nowadays are from where they plan many interesting trips in all directions.

Mrs. George Stritar of Seattle, Wash., and her sister, Miss Marie Neville, will return the first of the week from a New York trip. Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Neville and Miss Neville will go to California after Christmas.

His particular purpose in stopping is to see his new grandchild, the daughter of M. and Mrs. B. F. Sylvester, born Friday, Mrs. Sylvester was formerly Miss Ruth Mills.

Care of Tablecloths. Worn out damask cloths may be cut up to make everyday breakfast cloths, picnic lunch cloths, cloths for the invalid's tray, etc.

It does not pay to put a great deal of work in hemstitching or in hand scalloping on these cloths of soft old linen, but an attractive finish is added when the hem is turned and run in with darning stitch in two shades of wool.

Squares cut from old table cloths also make good napkins for the nursery table. Or they may be wisely utilized for bibs for the babies. Any left over strips may be cut and wound into bandages for "first aid" use in the household.

Problems That Perplex

Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

Judgment to fortify them, begin having what they call a good time, it's for them to know where to stop.

You can't imagine how many boys and girls hurt their health, ruin their prospects for growing and knowing, and undermine their standards as well as their prospects and constitutions by racing around with other boys and girls who haven't had time to "find themselves."

Your parents don't want you to run wild. They don't want you to be surfeited with pleasures whose importance you haven't learned to measure. They fear your getting entangled in a crowd where the worst and wildest influence may prevail. What you call a little liberty might so easily grow to be license. You might learn to tolerate things which a few more years' growth would tell you weren't worth paying the price for.

I think you ought to have pleasure even as it craves experience. But even though it's hard to wait, I can understand the careful, prudent and somewhat terrified parent who is afraid to let the nestlings venture out where danger may lurk.

All I can say is, try to gain peace and knowledge and patience and believe that you'll appreciate things all the more when they come to you just because you haven't gluttoned your appetite for gaiety.
