It was a straight semi-full skirt, ankle length, of soft gray brocaded crepe with a finish about the bottom of white silk braid in a tiny pattern. Her "bodice" was a straight coat shaped garment which fell below the hips, made of the gray crepe and finished with the white braid, with high neck and narrow standing collar, and long sleeves slightly bell shaped at the wrists. Her only ornament was a narrow band of medium size diamonds fitting close to her forehead and tucked into the little knot of shining black hair at the back. Her head was innocent of the slightest curl or ornament. Picturesque Figure.

Another picturesque figure was the official introducers and no assistants delegate from India, the Rt. Hon. to the hosts. Stinivasa Sastri, a highly bred Brah-min who wore black broadcloth with rather full trousers and rather ample frock coat buttoned straight to the other hostesses of representatives in neck and his broad white silk turban, made of a large roll of soft tesses. This was another step along

Monday night was an equity gala night with the secretary of state and Mrs. Hughes as hosts at a large reception in the building of the Pan-American union in honor of the foreign delegates. Arrangements there, it must be said, were anything but comfortable. The guests were 40 minutes upon the stairs, getting from the main floor to the recption room, where the two hosts received alone. The delegates, whom the other guests were asked to meet were scattered through the huge hall and few met them. Even the Japanese Prince Tokugawa spent a rather lonely evening, amid the dancing and the merriment of the young people who knew each other. There were no
