Polish Wrestlers Are Patrons Of Metropolitan Opera, Say Estheticism Helps

New York, Dec. 8 .- "My rules for success are determination, unswerv-ing purpose, self-denial and hard work."

No, gentle reader, it is not Charles M. Schwab giving advice to his employes; nor is it Elbert H. Gary of the steel corporation; neither is the above formula the catch-phrase of a

It is Stanislaus Zbyszko, a wrestling champion with ideals and a taste for grand opera.

The massive Pole, with muscles and nerves of Bessemer steel, is a grand opera fan and as confirmed a first-nighter as any patroness of the Metropolitan's bediamonded horse-

Stan and his little brother Wladek. have their own private concerts, the champion singing to Wladek's violin accompaniment. To gaze on the great hulks of these brothers you ould never suspect them of being addicted to music. From the contour of their heads and the great outlines their bodies anyone would conlude that the movies avere the eight of their aesthetic taste.

Opera Helps.

"Opera helps me wrestle," ex-lained Stanislaus. "Music is helpil and every man, no matter what he is or does, must have something beautiful to help him through life. Music is my help. It gives me high ideals. Perhaps you think wrestlers do not need high ideals. But you

"Wladek and I have many hot arguments about musical technique.
"When I was a little boy I began to have a liking for the better kind of music. I said then, 'I will y ver be old,' and in 60 years from now I shall still be young.

'My rules for success, if you want to know, are determination, self-denial, unswerving purpose and hard work, I cannot eat all the food I would like to; I don't smoke, and I don't dissipate. I must keep regular hours, and I must cling to my un-swerving resolution to Be What I Planned.

"And music, beautiful, soul-stirring music, representing beauty-that, too, must have a part in any kind of success, even wrestling. "Each night before I retire I ask myself the question:

"'Have I Succeeded Today?'" Although the wrestler did not go further it was unnecessary. The real secret of his success was apparent n that question which he puts to himself each night. He has the cosmic urge.
