When fashiou decrees straps on slippers, she has to sit back and devise a change in buckles, and the pretty, little round rhinestone ornaments that so many women are wearing to cover the strap button are the result of her cogitations. These are being widely worn this season, either in plain rhinestones or with a jewelled center to match an evening gown. Mrs. Edwin Davis prefers the latter style, and wears a pair of buckles with a green center which she had made to order. Miss Elizabeth Barker, Miss Gladys Peters and Mrs. George Flack are among those who are frequently seen wearing this new device. Mrs. J. E. Davidson's pair are shaped like tiny jewelled acorns, and Mrs. Albert Sibbernsen has a pair of shield-shaped buckles.

Mrs. Charles Metz wears a pair, and has even gone further and all the Mouse family. Pudgy Mr. appears occasionally in a jewelled anklet of black velvet. The fad is popular with the younger set as well. Miss Izetta Smith having worn a pair just before she left in October. Miss Dorothy Payne and Miss Jeanette Johnson also wear them.

Why Spanish Women Love Earrings

"I love my earrings," said Elisa ansino, who, with her brother, is doing a gorgeous Spanish dancing act at the Orpheum this week. "Do you always wear them?"

"Except when I sleep," she re-plied, touching tenderly the long three-sectioned beads of jet suspended from her pretty ears. In Spain they pierce a girl baby's cars when she is a few months old.

Cansino explained, and the child wears a small gold ring until old enough to adopt the more mar-velous dangles which most women, and all Spanish women, adore, Perhaps it is because earrings are parbecoming to the Spanish face that they love them so much. "Sec," said Miss Causino, pointing to her cheek bones, "high, wide, and then small," indicating the sudden narrowing of the face below them. It was easy to see why her sizable carrings seemed to belong on either side of this norrowing contour.

Miss Cansino is really Spanish. She and her brother are pupils of their father, for many years Ma-@ drid's most famous dancing master, now a teacher among New York's social set.

Dicky's drawling tones brought me to earth with a jerk, and I looked into his quizzical eyes with a con-iusion I could not hide.

his lips I had completely forgotten that I had made the copying of a romper dsign my excuse for asking to see Lillian before her drive with Robert Savarin. I was furious with myself for the embarrassed flush I could not control, especially as I knew from Dicky's tone and look that he had fathomed my ruse. I have learned in the last year to my surprise that Dicky sometimes jeal-ously resents the confidences which Lillian and I share, and I quickly resolved to tell him everything that I could honorably of the conversa-tion I had just quitted.

"I thought you'd get that," I said laughing. "I'll confess that the romper pattern is nonexistent, but-I ope Robert doesn't share your in-

Kidnaped.

There was great rejoicing among Somebody had stolen Miss Snooper -as the Mouse family always called Miss Kitty Cat! Somebody had taken her away!

Master Meadow Monse had seen it all; and he had told Moses exactly new it happened. Master Meadow Mouse knew that a wagon had borne Miss Snooper up the road and over the hill. He had watched it disap-pear, with his own eyes. All those things Moses Mouse repeated as fast as his short breath would permit. He had hurried back home to tell the news as soon as he had heard it. He found, however, that no one cared who took her; no one cared when, It was enough to know that she was gone. And everybody exclaimed that was the best news ever-and good riddance to bad rubbish - meaning Miss Kitty Cat.

If it were only true! The Mouse family scarcely dared believe that a beauty. But there were other matit was. But when two days had passed, and Moses Mouse himself had even ventured into the pantry, and the kitchen, and the woodshed, with- bait with which he had caught her. out meeting Miss Kitty, the Mouse family dared decide that she had indeed gone for good. Meantime Miss Kitty Cat was having a most unhappy time. It was true that she had been stolen. A man driving a peddler's wagon up the hill one evening had noticed her as she lay on top of the stone wall around the turn of the road beyond the farmhouse. "Kitty! Kitty! Kitty!" he called, as he stopped his horse. And reaching behind the seat, he brought out a bit of food, which he held out for her.

Now, it happened that at that very moment Miss Kitty Cat had her mind on food. She had been hoping that a meal would appear at any moment out of a chink in the wall. And when it was dangled right before her eyes like that she couldn't resist it She climbed up into the wagon. And the next thing she knew, the peddler had clapped her into a basket and fastened the cover. Miss Kitty Cat was a prisoner. "There, my beauty!" the peddler Gunther w exclaimed, "I'll take you home with January 7.

ters that she didn't like in the least Her captor had forgotten to toss the And it was somewhat breathless in-side her prison. And Miss Kitty Cat had no idea where the peddler was taking her.

He had clucked to his horse and started him plodding up the hill. Every time a wheel struck a stone Miss Kitty gritted her teeth. She never did enjoy riding in a wagon, anyhow. And this one was not at all mfortable.

"They'll wonder, back home, what's become of me," she thought. And one thing is certain: everybody will miss
