THE Brandeis restaurant is a popular place with the returned school girls. Many of them left for school before this new tea room opened, and they are hastening to make its acquaintance. Lunching there Tuesday were several groups. Miss Helen Rogers from Vassar, Miss Frances Patten from Wellesley and Miss Jeanette Johnson were together, and at another table were Miss Elinor Kountze and her cousin, Miss Margaret Eastman, who has just recovered from an operation for appendicitis. Miss Eastman is a freshman at Sweetbriar.

With Mrs. J. E. Davidson were her daughter, Miss Dorothy Davidson, and Miss Charlotte Smith. In another party were some of the older set, Miss Genevieve Wolfe, Miss Winifred Smith, Miss Ruth Carter, Miss Katharine Denny and Mrs. Richard Mallory.

To Honor Bride.

Miss Ruth Parker was hostess at a luncheon and matinee party Wednesday afternoon in honor of Miss Lorna McMartin, a bride of next week. Things You'll Love To Make

Brocade Silk Corset Bag

A brocade silk corset bag is a gift that you can make and give to a friend that others are not likely to think of. Cut an oblong of brocade silk; have it eight inches wide and a couple of inches longer than twice the length of her corset. Line the oblong with plain silk. Join the long sides. Turn in a one-inch heading. Join ivory rings, painted to match the silk, or covered with silk of the same color, at one-inch intervals around the top edge of the bag. Run a pretty two-toned or metal ribbon through the rings. You can enhance the beauty of this brocade silk corset bag by applying a small piece of plain silk, on which you have embroidered your friend's initials.

My Marriage Problems

Adelle Garrison's New Phase of "REVELATIONS OF A WIFE"

The Way "The Youngsters" Came From

A quick, sibilant breath from Lillian was her only comment upon my assurance that we were going home as soon as Bass Dean announced her departure.

I did not dare raise my eyes from my sewing until she should speak, for I had seen that in her face which told of intense nervous strain, and I knew it would be unthinkable humiliation for her to break down even before me. That Robert Savarin had not been able to suppress his jealousy and came man attitude toward her work during the drive they had just taken it did not require keen discrimination on my part to discover. I knew, also, what the reaction of her resolute poised personality toward his strictures must have been. One thing more I knew, that if her usual grip upon herself were not fail, the story of their drive would be a walk, or anything they please.

"That can be very easily arranged," I replied as calmly as if I had not realized that she was deliberately planning to keep out of Robert Savarin's way as much as possible during the few hours that remained of her stay at his sister's home.

I was wildly curious to know whether there had been a definite breach between them, or whether Lillian simply wished to avoid the strain of another possible scene with the highly-strung and finely-sensitive man who adored her, yet could not refrain from making her miserable with his theories. But I rigidly schooled my face and voice to indifference, and was glad indeed of the dinner bell—always rung 10 minutes before mealtime in order to give guests scattered around the table at the brook or in the woodland adjoining, time to come home.

"We'd better get ready to administer quick sponge baths," I laughed. "I can hear Dicky with Marion and Junior down at the brook, and you know as well as I the state the youngsters will be in."

"I have a complete change of clothing for Marion already laid out," she answered, smiling faintly. "And here they come! But," another involuntary smile touched her lips, "you are wrong in one particular. They've had their bath."

"I suppose that means they've fallen in again," I said resignedly, turning to watch the bedraggled procession which was coming up the path. Junior, drenched from head to foot, was in Dicky's arms, wrapped in his coat, while Marion danced at his side with her clothing also soaked. Dicky's shoes, socks and trousers below the knees were dripping, and both Lillian and I knew by heart the story which the three culprits proceeded to tell us.

Madge Has a Presentiment. "Me felled in the bid vaw, ma-ma," Junior declared proudly, as soon as he saw me.

"Truly, Auntie Madge, we couldn't help it this time!" Marion declared earnestly with an emphasis on the demonstrative. "We were fishing, and we hadn't caught a thing, and Junior saw a nice fish, and he went right in after it, and, of course, I had to go, too, to get him."

"The water being almost two feet deep at that point, and no big, strong man beside you to wade to his death or his knees to rescue his chieftain," Dicky teased.

Marion pouted adorably, but I saw real chagrin in her face, so came to her rescue.

"Of course you had to go in after him, Marion," I said, with no hint of a smile. "It was your Uncle Dicky's business to keep him from getting wet instead of rescuing him."

"I knew I'd get it in the neck somewhere," Dicky apostrophized the air, while Marion giggled gleefully. "That's all the thanks I get for spoiling a perfectly good—"

"Spare us the enumeration of your sartorial losses," I said mischievously, "and let's get these wet things off Junior. You're already soaked, and you take them off, and then I won't have to soak this gown. And I'll rub him down and dress him while you change."

"How well I know that!" she exclaimed. "But this request is—queered. Until I go, I want to spend a great deal of time in your bungalow, and—have no one—no one except you, and, of course, Dicky—know where I am. Let them think I've gone for a walk, or anything they please."

Lillian's Request. "How well I know that!" she exclaimed. "But this request is—queered. Until I go, I want to spend a great deal of time in your bungalow, and—have no one—no one except you, and, of course, Dicky—know where I am. Let them think I've gone for a walk, or anything they please."

Nothing Ventured, Nothing Gained. Dear Miss Fairfax: It is very unkind for a girl to marry at 20 years her senior? Speaking specifically, the girl is 20 and her fiance is about 40. He loves her deeply and gives her the utmost consideration. He is kind and unselfish, and is constantly doing little things that surprise and delight her. She repays him by giving him her whole heart. In her eyes he is perfect; but her happiness is overshadowed by the advice of her friends, who urge her to give him up as they tell her it is impossible to be happy when there is such a difference in their ages. The girl is troubled, of course, by the disapproval of the match by nearly all of her friends and acquaintances, but regardless of this she feels she cannot give him up, and is preparing to marry. Is she doing right, Miss Fairfax?

UNCERTAIN. A girl of 20 is very young even in sophisticated days. She has youth and dreams and illusions and immaturity. Life lies ahead. For the man of 40 she makes that she looks eagerly forward to lies in the background and has lost all charm. Now don't conclude that I'm advising against the specific marriage mentioned. In general I'd advise against the situation. But with so much in its favor, I don't think it is wise to sympathize and understanding and deep feeling at stake, who dare say "Give all this up. It's too big a risk." Most things that have to be paid for at a high rate. The venture is great—but so is the reward. Love is worth trying for, and there's always a risk!

Which of Two Girls? Dear Miss Fairfax: I fell in love with a girl a long time ago and we have been together until six months ago, when we parted owing to frequent disagreements. A certain young lady from a city nearby is madly in love with me now. I promise her that I will marry her, but I hardly have any love for her. I can't help thinking of the first girl. My heart belongs to her.

S. M. L. First of all, in justice to everyone concerned, you've no right to marry a girl you don't love. And in the second place, I don't think much of your strength and self control. Stop being so extravagant in your statements and get the facts straight back of your feelings. Give up the girl you don't love and make yourself worthy of the girl for whom you care.

Home-made, but Has No Equal for Coughs

Makes a family supply of really dependable cough medicine. Easily prepared, and saves about its low cost. It can be depended upon to give quick and lasting relief.

If you have a severe cough or chest cold accompanied with soreness, throat tickle, hoarseness, or difficult breathing, or if your child wakes up during the night with a severe cough, you want quick help, try this reliable old home-made cough remedy. Any drugist can supply you with 2½ ounces of Pinex. Pour this into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. Or you can use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup, if desired. This recipe makes a pint of really remarkable cough remedy. It tastes good, and in spite of its low cost, it can be depended upon to give quick and lasting relief.

You can feel the tickle hold of a cough in a way that means business. It loosens and raises the phlegm, stops throat tickle and soothes and heals the irritated membranes that line the throat and bronchial tubes with such promptness, ease and certainty that it is really astonishing. Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and is probably the best known means of overcoming severe coughs, throat and chest colds. There are many worthless imitations of this mixture. To avoid disappointment, ask for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.
