CHAPTER XVI.

A Significant Invitation. But the millionaire was centainly mot at all prepossessing. His eyes were rather sunken, and he had a burnt-out sort of look; his face was thin and lean and brown; and his mouth and chin were strongly cut, "I knew it! I could see it in his face! My deat, what a triumph for you. He'll ask you to marry him. Ninette, I can feel it in my bones!" Ninette, I can feel it in my bones!" Ninette, I can feel it in his face! My deat, what a triumph for you. and spoke of great determination.

He seemed more at home with men than with women. During din-
