The Story of Ninette

By RUBY M. AYRES. (Copyright, 1921, by The Wheeler Newspaper Syndicate.)

CHAPTER XXXIV. AN OLD Romance Renewed.

Ninette found herself alone in the drawing room. Margaret seemed to be avoiding her now, and sat turning the pages of a magazine, and the other women of the party were grouped together, talking and laughing.

Presently Ninette slipped from the room; she felt very lonely and unwanted, and in her heart she was unconsciously sure that the older women were talking about her, possibly disapproving of her.

She went up to her own room for a book she had been reading, and was coming down the stairs again when she caught the sound of Nothard's voice from the smoking room door.

"You mean that he's really gone, isn't he?" he was saying, in distressed tones.

Ninette paused at the foot of the staircase, which was close to the library door, and although she did not know why, her heart began to beat uncomfortably.

Another voice that she did not know answered the urgent question. "So I hear. There are all sorts of rumors, but I should think it quite likely that this one is the truth. They say he brought his daughter—that he paid Mrs. Crawford handsomely to look after her until such time as things blow over, or he is able to come back to London again. By the way, did you ever see a girl of that age dressed up in such a ridiculous fashion?"

There was a hint of amused scorn in the speaker's voice, and Ninette's pale face flushed dullly. "Diamonds that a duchess might wear at court. And that absurd frock!"

"I always said that the man was a blackguard," Nothard said, after a moment, with great bitterness. "Look how he treated his wife. The man has never gone straight. There ought to be a law to prevent such a scoundrel from having the custody of a girl like Ninette."

"Ninette! Is that her name?" The other man sounded interested. "You know," he went on, after a moment, "she wouldn't be bad-looking if someone would tell her how to dress."

Ninette made some inaudible reply, and Ninette went down the last stair and stole across the hall back to the drawing room.

She felt very cold and almost without feeling. When Mrs. Crawford spoke to her, indicating a vacant chair at her side, she went across to her obediently and sat down.

"You look tired, my dear," the older woman said kindly. She patted Ninette's hand. "Would you like to go to your room? Oh, here come the men at last!"

Nothard came into the room first; he was very pale and his eyes were straight to Ninette. She was looking at him, too, and after a moment's hesitation, he came across to her.

"Peter, take my chair. I am sure that you and Ninette must have a great deal to talk about. Margaret has been telling me what I did not know—that you two are old friends."

She moved away without waiting for an answer, and Peter took her vacant chair.

He looked at Ninette with kindly concern. "Have you a headache?" he asked. "You look so pale."

Ninette made no answer for a moment; then she turned her dark eyes to him.

"I was out in the hall just now when you were talking to someone in the library, and I listened. I suppose I ought not to have, but I am glad now that I did. She paused and bit her lip to steady his trembling. "Where has my father gone?" she asked.

Nothard flushed, turned crimson; he tried to laugh. "Your father? How do I know? You told me yourself that he was going to America. You overheard nothing about yourself, Ninette."

The girl's eyes blazed. "That's a lie and you know it is," she said with quiet passion. "You hinted that he had done something disgraceful so that he could not come back to London yet awhile. You spoke of me, I heard my name. You laughed at my frock—at my diamonds."

"Ninette! For God's sake—" "I heard you," she went on, in the same tones of quiet despair. "Perhaps you are right—I don't know." She glanced down at the magnificent diamonds on her wrist and shivered; then rose to her feet.

ADVERTISMENT. ACID IN STOMACH SOURS THE FOOD

Says Excess of Hydrochloric Acid is Cause of Indigestion.

A well-known authority states that stomach trouble and indigestion are nearly always due to acidity—acid stomach—and not, as most folks believe, from a lack of digestive juices. He states that an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach retards digestion and starts food fermentation, then our meals sour like garbage in a can, forming acid fluids and gases which inflate the stomach like a toy balloon. We then get that heavy, lumpy feeling in the chest, we eructate sour food, belch gas, or have heartburn, flatulence, waterbrash or nausea.

He tells us to lay aside all digestive aids and instead get from any pharmacy four ounces of Lad Salts and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast while it is effervescing, and, furthermore, to continue this for one week. While relief follows the first dose, it is important to neutralize the acidity, remove the gas-making mass, start the liver, stimulate the kidneys and thus promote a free flow of pure digestive juices.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and sodium phosphate. This harmless salt is used by thousands of people for stomach trouble with excellent results.

Bambina Delmont Shows Letters to Prove Her Name

Wounded Grocer Lies Near Death in Hospital—Gunner Escapes After Firing Shot.

Lincoln, Feb. 2.—(Special Telegram.)—Mrs. Bambina Delmont, member of the fateful Labor day party in "Fatty" Arbuckle's room at the St. Francis hotel, San Francisco, laughed last night when told that certain press associations had issued denials that she was in her old home town, Lincoln, straightening out the estate of her grandmother, Mrs. Katherine Scott, and not in San Francisco.

"Well, I guess I can prove it if I need to," she said.

Reaching into her purse, Mrs. Delmont produced a letter written on the stationery of the juvenile court at San Francisco and signed by John B. Williams, juvenile officer. The letter was addressed to Mrs. Bambina Delmont Hoppe and acknowledged receipt of her parole report.

"You see," she said, "they had me arrested and convicted on a bigamy charge in San Francisco in order to impeach any testimony I offered against Arbuckle. Then I was paroled and ordered to report once a month as to my conduct. This is a receipt of my parole."

Mrs. Delmont produced a letter written to her by Mrs. Kate Hardebeck, an aunt of Virginia Kapp. The letter said: "I know they don't want your testimony, and no doubt they will keep you from going on the stand."

"The settlement of her grandmother's estate, she declared, was in the hands of Lincoln Frost, attorney. Judge Frost substantiated the statement of Mrs. Delmont that her grandmother's estate was being settled here.
