

Denby Makes Move to Save Annapolis Graduating Class

Secretary of Navy Insists Members Are Needed—Admiral Wilson Urges Speedy Decision.

Washington, March 1.—The Navy department stepped forward today in an effort to save the naval academy graduating class from being forced to walk the plank in June.

Taking cognizance of a movement in congress to turn the 341 members back to civil life, Secretary Denby, Rear Admiral Wilson, superintendent of the academy, and Rear Admiral Washington, chief of the line and navigation, insisted before the house naval committee that they were needed; that the three other classes should be permitted to graduate according to schedule, and that no reduction be made in the number to be admitted next fall.

Unrest in Academy. Because of the unrest among the 2,272 men at Annapolis, Admiral Wilson declared a speedy decision ought to be made, while Admiral Washington, looking to the future, asserted that the need for the service of the midshipmen would be far greater 10 years hence than now.

While conflicting views were expressed as to what the naval committee might recommend, questions at the hearing indicated a growing sentiment in favor of commissioning the first class and retaining at least an equal number of older men in the service, many of whom have reached the age of retirement and are reported to be anxious to get out. The naval appropriation bill would be reported this morning according to the present expectations, by the end of the month. Until the bill is presented, the midshipmen will not know their status definitely.

have come to the middle west and to the areas that are far from any benefits of water competition and they have made us pay for our own lumber!" He spoke feelingly of the "tragedy of transportation," as it grips the middle west, and said that if anything could be done that would bring the middle west 1,200 miles nearer the ocean, it should be done. He disavowed any intention to injure New York, remarking that "if the seacoast is a good thing for New York, we would like to have it also."

fuel and capital ships of both fleets to a maximum of five days steaming per month. To keep within the deficiency limit indicated by the appropriations committee today, it is said to be obvious that even this steaming allowance must be suspended and every ship from battleships and destroyers to naval transports and tugs, be kept idle at anchor or at the dock with only sufficient steam in the boiler to provide fire protection, lights, heating and other vital necessities of ship life.

Tests Already Abandoned

View of the urgent necessity for government economy, however, the department already has reduced fleet operating training and abandoned engineering tests when its estimates of $12,000,000 as the probable fuel deficiency was presented.

Bemedaled Super-Hero Is Thankful He Has a Job Again

Italian Government Adds Decoration to Collection of "Buck Private" Frank J. Bart, Who "Didn't Want to Be Tied Down to a Bunch of Men"—Ranks With York and Woodfill.

Jersey City, N. J., March 1.—The war record of a third super-hero, Frank J. Bart of West Hoboken, is being prepared for a place in the hall of fame today, following a ceremony here Monday at which the Italian government added another medal to his already generous collection.

Bart's record is believed by officers of the Second corps area at Governor's Island to equal those of Serg. Alvin York and Lieut. Samuel Woodfill.

Bart enlisted in the Ninth regiment at the age of 42, giving his age as 33, after recruiting officers repeatedly told him he was "too old to fight." He doesn't know how many of the enemy he accounted for, or how many of his wounded comrades he rescued.

He was decorated at the Fourth regiment army here Monday night by Col. V. A. Di Bernozzo, Italian military attaché at Washington, D. C. The ceremony was attended by is any reasonable assurance that the Atlantic ocean can be extended 2,000 miles into the interior of this country, then the state of New York will heartily support this project." Facts Dissipate Dream. He said that there was a tremendous appeal to the imagination which the project of extending the Atlantic ocean 2,000 miles inland makes, but cold hard facts dissipated the dream, as no reliable body of engineers had ever reported on the sounding in the St. Lawrence, the cost of icebreakers in the river and other essential things, a set of stockholders, who are the people of the United States, ought to know.
