Bird Baths and Fountains. By JEAN TRUE.

Your little tenants, the birds, will need fresh water for their daily bath, hence bird baths or fountains become a necessity in your garden or about your lawn. There are many interesting baths and fountains to be found that will meet your needs. One may find them in cement, tile, terra cotta

The terra cotta baths are most popular. The small ones are usually 11 inches high and 20 some inches in diameter, the larger ones range from 30 some inches in height to 23 inches in width. Some of the baths have perches to accommodate the birds. The water is shallow on one side and deep on the other. These baths have sloping bottoms. Some of them centain a food hold in the center. Cement baths are cheaper and have all the conveniences for birds.

Marble is expensive and can be had only by the well-to-do. If you do not care to purchase baths or fountains for the birds, use flat bowls with good rims or earthern jars to take the place of the more expensive ones. You can coat them on the outside with paint, any color you desire, and place them near your hydrant.

Be faithful to the birds and fill this bath every day, and watchthe birds will soon seek your lawn. You can have the pleasure of placing food near the bath if you like. You will be made happy by seeing your feathered friends frequent your bird bath on the warm day to infuse some young blood into his legal firm. So he advertised for ther day. They were discussing the a clever young lawyer to come A partnership with the greatest legal mind of the day was not a thing to be despised, so all the young lawyers from miles around came trooping to the place appointed by the judge for examining ap-

When all the youthful solons had gathered the judge marched them into one large room and started telling them a story. With varying de grees of astonishment they listened to the tale which didn't seem to have much to do with the matter of choosing a partner. Said the judge:

"Once upon a time an old farmer was out looking over his crops and as he came toward the barn he saw a bird perched on the roof. So he lifted his shotgun and aimed at the bird. As he fired a bit of wadding came out and fell on the barn. In moment it was in flames. The fire spread to the garden between the house and barn and then to the

"While the farmer was trying to call his hands and put out the fire in the barn and save his cattle, the flames destroyed everything about. The apple orchard was burned down, the house was razed, the barn was soon a pile of ashes. The cattle were destroyed, the crops were swept by the flames. Everything the farmer possessed was in black and smoking ruins in a very few hours.

At the end of this recital the young lawyers were to be heard exclaiming over the dire results of that shot. But in the midst of the murmurs of sympathy, one young student of the
