THE handsome bedspread to be given as first prize at the College club bridge party Wednesday afternoon has had a "career." In the first place, it was made in Dalton, Ga., of unbleached muslin and candle wicking. The candle wicking was dyed the beautiful blue that people have been admiring in the Eldredge-Reynolds window where the prizes are on display. The wicking was run through and then cut, making the fluffy tufting seen.

Mrs. Alvin Johnson saw it some days ago and made an immediate purchase. When Mrs. Harvey Newbranch was told that the tufted blue bedspread was gone she registered dismay.

"The blue bedspread? That was to have been our first prize. Who bought it? We must get it back."

When Mrs. Newbranch learned the name of the purchaser, she took heart, for she knew Mrs. Johnson and thought she could recover the sold goods. Mrs. Johnson was accommodating. The bedspread was returned and an order placed for future delivery for Mrs. Johnson. The College club has orders now for a dozen of these attractive spreads.

Cleveland-Fowler.

The marriage of Miss Gladys Fowler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. Fowler and George R. Cleveland, son of Mr. L. Cleveland will take place Thursday afternoon at the residence of Rev. C. E. Cobbley who will officiate. The attendants will be Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Fowler. Following the ceremony a reception will be held at the R. E. Fowler home.

McCaffrey-O'Connor.

Mrs. Susan McCaffrey of Hastings announces the marriage of her daughter, Eleanor, and Hugh Thomas O'Connor, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. O'Connor of Omaha, which took place Tuesday morning at Creighton chapel, Father Quinlan officiating. Miss Anna McCaffrey, sister of the bride, and J. J. O'Connor, jr., brother of the groom, were the attendants. Mr. O'Connor is graduate of Creighton. The couple will reside in Wichita, Kan.

West-Daley.

The marriage of Miss Alice Daley, daughter of Martin Daley of Council Bluffs and Ray West, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. S. West, of Papillion, took place Monday morning at St. Francis Xavier church. Monsignor F. P. McManus officiated. Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Strawn were the attendants. The bride was gowned in brown crepe embroidered in beads and her hat was of the same shade. Her corsage was of Ward roses. The ceremony was followed by a breakfast at the Daley home. Mr. and Mrs. West will be at home after May 1 at 4325 Leavenworth street.

Salvage Shop Needs Clothing.

Children's clothing is especially needed at the Salvage shop, 511 North Sixteenth street, according to Mrs. William E. Martin, in charge. Old clothing, cruminals, hats, shoes, china and other articles having a possible value, are accepted and will be called for. All proceeds of the shop go to the benefit of the Child Saving institute.

Church Luncheon.

Reservations for the luncheon to be given by the women of the First Methodist Congregational church April 25 should be made by Saturday, April 22, with Mrs. Robert Klock. Proceeds from the affair will be added to the church building fund.

Dinner for Geraldine Hess.

Mr. and Mrs. George Van Brunt and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hauman, jr., entertained at dinner at the Van Brunt home Tuesday evening complimentary to Miss Geraldine Hess and her fiancé, Douglas Peters. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Hess, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Peters, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Allison, Misses Daphne Peters and Gretchen Hess, Messrs. Clarence Peters and Temple McCayden.

Helen Smith Bride of Philip Lovell Tuesday

Easter lilies formed an appropriate setting for the nuptials of Miss Helen Danforth Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Crittenden Smith, and Philip Gray Lovell of Cambridge, Mass., Tuesday afternoon at All Saints Episcopal church. Easter lilies and tall palms decorated the chancel of the church and the vested choir sang the bridal chorus from Lohengrin.

Miss Eleanor Burkley, the maid of honor, was gowned in "pricot" tulle shot with gold. The short skirt was made in hoop effect and a panel of white chantilly lace fell from the front of the bodice.

The bridesmaids were Misses Mary Luke of New York, Esther Smith, sister of the bride, Virginia Wright of New York, Dorothy Batchelder of Boston, a cousin of the bride. They wore gowns of green tulle shot with gold. Their hats were of the "directoire" style made of gold tissue over green and they carried daffodils.

The bride wore the wedding gown of her mother which is of heavy pearl color brocade made according to the Marie Antoinette period. The neck was square with a bertha of rose point and Duchesse lace and the seams were embroidered with pearls. The elbow sleeves were finished with flounces of the lace. The gown had a long court train and the veil of rose point and Duchesse lace fell over it. A short tulle veil edged with pearls covered the bride's face during the ceremony. She carried a bouquet of Easter lilies.

The groom had a long court train and the veil of rose point and Duchesse lace fell over it. A short tulle veil edged with pearls covered the bride's face during the ceremony. She carried a bouquet of Easter lilies.

J. Huntington Smith, brother of the bride was best man and the ushers were Casper Offutt, Lewis Burgess, Robert A. Howe, Ray Millard, Morse Palmer, Floyd Smith, jr., and Francis Gaines with Harry Burkley, head usher.

The bride attended Miss Spence's school in New York City. Mr. Lovell attended Harvard.

Mrs. Wallace D. Lovell, mother of the groom, was given in the ceremony. She was gowned in gray crepe de chine and wore a henna color hat trimmed with an ostrich feather of the same shade.

The ceremony was followed by a reception for the guests at the parish house.

Mr. and Mrs. Lovell will motor east and plan to make their home at 23 Park road, Weston, Mass.

My Marriage Problems

Adele Garrison's New Phase of "REVELATIONS OF A WIFE" (Copyright 1922)

The Question Lillian Asked Madge.

Katie was closeted with Lillian for over half an hour, while Mother Graham turned and sizzled because the breakfast dishes had not been removed from the table. It was only my hint, dropped as a last resort, that Lillian was questioning Katie concerning the events of the memorable night when Jim had left us, which finally quieted her. Nevertheless, she fired a grumbling last shot to the effect that Lillian might have waited until the breakfast dishes were done before taking Katie away.

I had hard work to keep from echoing her irritability—not, however, from my concern for the kitchen work, but because, aside from the interest I had in Katie's revelation, I was so filled with amazement that my little maid should have chosen Lillian instead of me as the recipient of her momentous confidence. It was an astonishment which, to my self-scorn, held distinct traces of pique and resentment. I suppose it was a feminine application of the old saying which deals with a man's being a hero to his valet. I had been wrapped for so long in Katie's funny but sincere adoration that it jolted me a little to have her take so important a secret to Lillian, ignoring me altogether.

McCaffrey-O'Connor.

At the end of the half hour Lillian came in search of me. There was a look upon her face which surprised me, as if she had just undergone some unexpected emotional experience, and there were distinct traces of tears in her eyes—tears from Lillian, who almost never indulged in them.

"I have sent Katie to her room," she said abruptly. "I knew you wouldn't mind, for she is all in. I told her I'd see to the breakfast dishes—she knew Mother Graham would be on the warpath about them—and I must confess I'd like some kind of absorbing work for a little while. I don't know when I've been so stirred by anything—come along to the kitchen—we'll get Mother Graham quieted down first—and then I can talk while we work."

"We did not need to look long for Mother Graham. She was moving around the kitchen, guarding her damaged arm from knocking against anything, and trying with her uninjured hand to pile up the breakfast dishes.

"Oh, mother: You mustn't do this," I exclaimed, genuinely afraid that she might hurt herself. "Somebody's got to do it," she retorted tartly, "and I haven't seen anybody else breaking any bones doing it."

"Now, Mother Graham!" Lillian laid a privileged and affectionate hand upon the older woman's shoulder. "Madge and I are just waiting the chance to break our bones out here. And we'll promise to rinse every dish properly with hot water and polish them until we can see our faces in them, if you'll only go upstairs and rest."

My mother-in-law grinned reluctantly and glanced at us shyly. "You won't see anything very cheerful," she observed acridly, "judging from the looks of both of you now. Where's that ape of a girl?"

"You've guessed?" Lillian said. "I've had a session with her"—she lowered her voice portentously—"questioning on that business—you understand."

She might have been the chief figure in the third act of a melodrama in the gravity and emphasis of her words and manner. But Mother Graham swallowed everything eagerly and without suspicion shook her head sagely.

"Well, yes, of course!" she said. "Well, I suppose she will have to rest awhile. She'll be watching, that girl, not that I think there's any real harm in her, but she's just the footless kind to be made a fool of and a fool of, she'll not put anything over on me, though."

She swept with stately mien out of the kitchen, while Lillian closed the door to keep my half-hysterical laughter from reaching Mother Graham's ears.

"I-I can't help it, Lillian," I said, apologetically, when I had pulled myself together and had observed that she was unwilling, though not disapproving. "I-I seem to want to laugh at everything today."

"You're unstrung, hysterical," Lillian diagnosed, coolly. "What you need is a jolt, and I'm going to give you one. Have you guessed yet why Katie chose to 'break her swear' to me instead of to you?"

"Why, I suppose she thought you knew more about the thing, were the leader, and—"

"What utter rot!" Lillian retorted, emphatically. "You know that in Katie's estimation there is no one in the world so wise as you. No, you'll have to guess again, and when you find out the real reason, as I just did, you'll feel like standing uncovered before that girl's grit and sacrifice."

For Lois Howell. Mrs. Paul Bradley entertained at luncheon at the University club Tuesday in honor of Miss Lois Howell, whose marriage to Dwight Evans will take place Saturday. Courage bouquets formed the centerpiece for the luncheon table. The guests included Mrs. Brandon Howell, Mrs. Morton Engelman, Mrs. J. P. Slater, Mrs. W. W. Davenport and Misses Beulah and Cora Evans.

Dancing Party. The Train School club will entertain at a dancing party Saturday evening at the Swedish auditorium.

Common Sense

By J. J. Mundy. Do You Expect Too Much Confidence of People?

You feel that you should have the support of a certain group of your pet project and are surprised and hurt because the support seems to be a rival concern.

Naturally, you expect your friends to be loyal.

Also, you know reasons why your plans ought to carry out for a greater success than the possibly well-conceived plans for another.

You think that your superior judgment should be apparent to others.

Isn't it possible that those you are blaming have not had an opportunity to know facts which influence your plans of procedure.

Why blame a person who had limited experience?

Instead of feeling hurt—which has an element of vanity in your case—you want your ideas to stand out paramount. It may be a good thing that you have a little opposition.

When everything goes your way you do not work hard enough.

You must dig in, and build up such a structure of accomplishment that others are bound to concede your superiority.

Even an enemy is bound to recognize your ability if you make it overwhelming enough.

Affairs for Mr. Hamilton. Charles Burgess entertained at luncheon Monday in honor of George E. Hamilton of Washington, D. C., fiance of Miss Marion Hamilton of this city.

Harry Koch will give a luncheon in his honor Thursday.

Hippocrates, the "Father of Medicine," many centuries later, knew less of the merit of vegetable drugs than did the women of ancient times.

Lydia E. Pinkham, nearly fifty years ago, gave to women her Vegetable Compound, now known everywhere as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. This is a woman's medicine for women's ailments, prepared from medicinal plants.

A Silly Song

By A CUCKOO BIRD. Battle Hymn of the Home Brewer.

Mine eyes have seen my neighbor take a rod of copper coil and work all night to make a half a pint of fusel oil, and poison forty people with the product of his toil since prohibition came. And I have seen the booze hounds raid my neighbor's humble shack and smash his still and carry off his home brew in a sack, and then get forty gallons more next week when they came back. Since prohibition came my neighbor never used to drink a stronger thing than tea, but now he's always trying out some bran new recipe to make some new concoction that will send him on a spree since prohibition came.

And I, myself, in days of old would pass the bar room by, but nowadays I seem somehow to be forever dry. I follow down the alley every man that winks his eye since prohibition came.
