Hair Is Woman's Crowning Glory

By ELEANOR W. STEWART. Nowadays women give so much attention to their hair that it is hardly necessary to call attention to the wisdom of constant care. Many times, however, the methods used are as harmful as neglect would be.

Frequent shampooing is necessary to keep the scalp and hair clean, but too frequent shampooing causes overdryness. Once in two or three weeks is a good rule for the average person to follow. If it is found that the hair needs washing more often than this dryness can be offset by rubbing the scalp with alcohol in which is dissolved from three to six teaspoonfuls of castor oil to the pint.

Many people make the mistake of thinking that oil nourishes the hair. The hair as it emerges from the skin is dead tissue and cannot be nourished. The fats merely keep the hair glossy. Though every one was glad when the last hairpin disappeared, there is danger in the resulting close fitting hat. Hats that fit too tightly stop circulation and prevent ventilation. It is this that is one of the causes of the prevalent baldness among men. It plays almost as great havoc among women, causing the hair to drop out and recede from the forehead.

When it comes to hospital manners the obligations are all on one side. If you visit a friend in a ward or private room, remember that the very fact that he is in a hospital acquits him of the usual demands of courtesy to a very great extent. Although you are his guest you should not judge his conduct by the usual standards of hospitality. If you are so sensitive that you are going to feel snubbed or insulted at your manner of reception, or out of sorts because you are informed by a nurse after 10 minutes that it is time for your call to terminate, then you had far better not go to see your friend. Moreover no one ought to visit a friend in the hospital who is not sufficient master of his own emotions to go through the visit without showing the patient how grave may be his condition. Never visit any one in the hospital unless you are quite sure that the patient wants to see you and that he is in a condition not to be harmed by your visit. Just because when you were in the hospital you welcomed any and all visitors as a means of breaking the deadly monotony of gazing at those four blank hospital walls is no guarantee that your friend also desires visitors. Find out from members of his family who have seen him or from his nurse whether you are wanted.

Being Polite in a Hospital

Then learn the rules of the hospital for visiting. In most hospitals ward visitors are welcomed only on certain days of the week. In other hospitals there are only certain hours in the day when visitors are allowed in the private rooms. Don't show your lack of consideration by asking to see a friend out of these stipulated hours. Never enter a friend's private room or knock for admission, even though you believe him to be well on the way to recovery, without first reporting to the nurse on duty in the corridor. Sometimes a guest finds his way to a private room and thinks he has done enough when he knocks at the door. The patient may believe it to be one of the hospital attendants when he replies "Come!" and the visitor will then gain admission when the patient is really not ready to receive him or possibly not really in condition to see anybody.

All the experience, knowledge and skill of the great Washburn-Crosby Mills have been combined to produce a real whole wheat flour—the product of this old stone grinder. It is the whole of the wheat, nothing added and nothing removed. It is from this flour that we make our WHOLE WHEAT bread and WHEAT-A-LAXA Bread, the whole wheat loaf with Sun Maid raisins. Either loaf a natural grain laxative.

We have been making our genuine, certified WHOLE WHEAT Bread and WHEAT-A-LAXA Bread (a whole wheat loaf with raisins) for years. Both loaves are wrapped in a sanitary wax paper wrapper that thoroughly protects the loaves from the outside and retains all the rich, health-promoting qualities within.

WHEAT-A-LAXA, our whole wheat bread with delicious Sun Maid Raisins, has the iron necessary to promote good health—sufficient vitamins and all the goodness of the real whole wheat. Insist on WHOLE WHEAT Bread or, if you prefer, WHEAT-A-LAXA, the whole wheat loaf with raisins.
