

Butcher Knife and Ax Are Used in Family Duel

Woman Clasp Knife and Man With Ax Found Dead in Home—Children See Fight Start.

Omaha Has Leased Wire. Bad Axe, Mich., May 10.—It all started with a quarrel that brought Joseph Lobert and his wife back from a picnic on Sunday. It ended with the finding of their bodies in one of the rooms of the farmhouse, through which they had fought, she with a butcher knife, and he with anything that came to hand, until he struck his final blow with an ax.

The bodies were found when their oldest child returned from school late Monday, but the news and the explanation only became generally known yesterday. It all was explained by Edward, Jr., who sat with his little sister, 2, and a baby brother, six months in a baby carriage in the yard of the farmhouse, which is located near Elkton. They saw the start of the trouble through a window. They did not see the finish. Edward, of course, was the only one able to tell anything. He said papa and mamma started their fight in the kitchen.

From the oldest, a boy of 10, the authorities learned that on Sunday the father and mother, seemingly on good terms, had gone for the picnic. When they returned they were quarreling. The boy said things appeared better Monday morning when he left for school.

At that point, little Edward's fragmentary story of the start of the fight came. The authorities had to imagine the rest. That was relatively simple. The interior of the house was blood-spattered. Chairs and tables were wrecked. Broken dishes were scattered about.

The condition of the bodies told the rest, the story of a hand-to-hand fight. His throat was cut and he had been stabbed several times. Her head was cut open from the blow of an ax and marks of previous blows showed on her arms and shoulders. Bruises showed that crockery and pieces of furniture had been used in the fight, before the two duelists "closed in."

Sisters Plead for Reformatory Terms

Lincoln, May 10.—(Special.)—Maude Robson and Grace Slade, Council Bluffs sisters, accompanied by Mrs. Robson's husband, an Omaha traveling salesman, appeared before the state board of pardons and paroles again yesterday, begging to be allowed to serve their time for shoplifting at the York reformatory rather than the penitentiary.

Robson's arms encircled his wife's waist and the two sisters wept copiously throughout the hearing.

The board gave them respite from their sentences until the hearing today. The board took no action, but the respite expired, so Sheriff Ira Miller of Lancaster county met them at the door and took them in custody. Robson kissed both women goodbye at the prison gates.

They will be placed in the Lancaster county jail to await decision of the board on their plea.

His automobile was overturned near his home last Saturday morning and a little later an envelope containing $25,000 in Liberty bonds, belonging to him was found near the scene.

Dudley was in conference with County Attorney Vasey and the sheriff, at the close of which the attorney stated that no action would be taken at the present time against Dudley.
