

The Dancing Master

By RUBY AYRES.

Netta hesitated; then suddenly she asked: "Why didn't you marry Neil Farmer?"
Elizabeth winced.
"I didn't care for him. I couldn't. He was ever so kind—and I'm afraid I hurt him dreadfully."
Netta laughed.
"He's running after an actress now, my dear; I don't think you damaged him very much."
Elizabeth looked away. She had not cared for Farmer, or wished to marry him, but it hurt somehow to know that he had so soon forgotten that he loved her.

Was every one the same, she wondered? Was there no such thing as constancy or true love in the world? "So you're not married to any one?" Netta said bluntly.
"No."
"Nor engaged?"
"No."
"Then why on earth didn't you answer Pat's letter?" There was angry exasperation in Netta's voice. "You might have written even if you had changed your mind."
Elizabeth turned scarlet, and her breath came fast. "What do you mean? I never had a letter—he never wrote to me. I haven't seen him or heard from him for—for five months. Oh, Netta, what do you mean?"
Netta shrugged her shoulders.

"It's no business of mine," she said usually. "But he did write." Elizabeth wrote from Paris as soon as he could; he sent the letter to you at the Senecus woman's. It was the only address he knew."
"I never had it! I never had it!" Elizabeth said wildly. She was trembling from head to foot. "If he did write, making a never sent it on to me—oh, indeed, I never had it!"
Netta made a little grimace.
"It's odd how letters go astray sometimes," she said drily. "However, if you say you never had it—"
"You know I never did! I should have written if I should have written," Elizabeth's voice was hoarse with emotion; her lips quivered so that she could hardly form her words.
Netta's eyes grew more kindly.

"Well, don't get so upset," she said. "Here—I'll take you back to my place for some tea. It's only a tiny furnished flat—but it's all we could get, and we're going abroad soon, so I don't bother you much." She hailed a passing taxi and bundled Elizabeth into it unceremoniously.
"You look ill, you know," she said with blunt kindness. "I'm sorry if I upset you, but I was wild at the time—I thought you'd changed your mind, and didn't care for him after all. He thought so, too. I know—I never saw anyone so hard hit as he was when you didn't write; but, of course, if the letter never reached you—"
Elizabeth shook her head; she could not trust herself to speak, and for a few moments Netta sat staring out of the window, frowning.

Presently she said abruptly: "He's doing quite well now, you know. The French people seemed to like him as soon as he got over there, and some old French countess, or whatever she was, took him under her wing and made every one go to him to be taught."
"She made him the fashion in three months, and now he's doing ever so well."
"I'm glad—I'm very glad," Elizabeth said faintly.
"He wanted to chuck it all up when you never answered his letter," Netta went on. "He would have done it if it hadn't been for me—I made him stick to it," she laughed apologetically.

"She was a good fish in the sea as any that had been caught—I used to hope he would forget you, and take a fancy to some one else. He's a wife."
Elizabeth looked up; her face was drawn and peaked; she could not understand why Netta seemed so deliberately trying to hurt her.
"Ought to have a wife," she echoed mirthlessly. "How can he when he is married already?"
Netta turned sharply.
"Married!" she ejaculated; she stared helplessly at Elizabeth, then: "My God! Didn't you know Enid was dead?" she asked blankly.

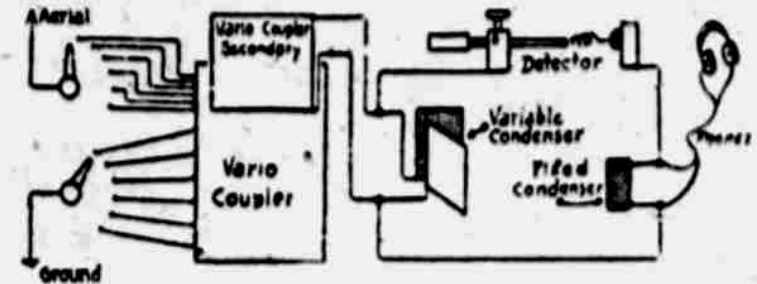

"Dead!" Elizabeth's lips formed the word, but no sound escaped her; she closed her eyes—she felt as if all the breath had been forced from her body by the sudden shock; the people world seemed to recede, leaving her in a space of mists and uncertainties.
Then slowly she struggled back to consciousness, to find Netta crying remorsefully and chafing her hands.
"You poor kid! I was so sure you must know! Don't you ever see the papers? Didn't anyone tell you? She's been dead three months—it was an accident. . . . She always took stuff to make her sleep, and she took an overdose. . . . Oh, what a fool I am—what a clumsy fool!"

Elizabeth tried hard to recover herself, but she was shaking in every limb; it was some time before she could find her voice, then she said breathlessly:
"I'm all right now—quite all right." Then suddenly she broke down into bitter sobbing: "Oh, why didn't I know! Why didn't I know!"
Netta put comforting arms around her.

"You poor little thing! What a ghastly muddle, isn't it? Pat eating his heart out for you, and you—she broke off. Here we are. This is my place; dry your eyes, there's a dear—everything will come right. I know it will. You'll get such a headache. . . . I'll make you some tea."
She opened the door of the little flat with her key and led the way.

"I haven't a maid; but you just go into the sitting room and make yourself at home. The fire's lit because it gets so chilly at night now. Freddie isn't in. . . . Freddie's my brother—he's out with a friend—so we shall be quite alone."
Elizabeth obeyed apathetically. She was still shaken with sobbing. She sat down by the fire and hid her face in her hands.
Would things ever come right for

RADIO

How Condenser Is Best Connected

Device Used in Crystal Detector Set in Series With Vario-Coupler Secondary.

Connections of the variable book condenser described in the radio columns of The Bee last week should be made across the terminals of the vario-coupler secondary in a crystal receiving set. The proper "hook-up" is shown in the accompanying diagram.

This is done by running a wire from one side of the condenser to one binding post of the vario-coupler secondary and from the other side of the secondary to the opposite side of the condenser. No other change need be made in the crystal detector "hook-up."
Because of the location of the vario-coupler secondary binding posts it will be found easier to connect the wires at the back of the condenser instead of to the binding posts on the front. These binding posts may be needed later if you change to a vacuum tube circuit.

If another variable condenser is desired it should be connected in series with the vario-coupler primary in order to do this, instead of running the ground wire direct from the "ground" binding post of the vario-coupler, connect that binding post to one binding post of the second condenser and then ground the other binding post of the condenser.
You may utilize the binding posts on the front of the condenser panel for these connections. The use of a second condenser is not advisable unless you are using an aerial, which is 200 or more feet.

Bee Radio Programs Entertain Thousands

Far and wide throughout the middle west, The Bee radio concerts have entertained thousands. In small towns and in ranch homes, audiences gather about receiving sets to listen in on the music and addresses broadcast on various nights by The Bee from the Omaha Grain Exchange station.

The success of these radio concerts now? she wondered wildly. Or, was it too late? It was torture to feel that all these months she had suffered the depths of misery when there had been no need.
Royston was free, and she had not known it; Royston had written, and she had never had the letter; she felt that her heart would break.
She could hear Netta moving about in the passage outside, and only she thought she heard voices, and with a desperate effort she tried to control herself as the door of the room opened.

She brushed her tears away. She began to say in a quivering voice, "What a dear little room, Netta—"
"Elizabeth!"
Elizabeth rose to her feet and looked round with wild eyes; she thought she must be dreaming one of the many, cruel dreams that had tortured her during the past five months.

Royston stood there by the door; his face was gray with passionate agitation, but he tried to smile at her eyes.
"My dear—my dear," he said and held out his arms.
Elizabeth gave a broken, sobbing cry; she covered her eyes with her hands—she felt as if she was falling—then strong arms caught and held her, and her head was pressed to a man's throbbing heart. "I love you—I love you."

TOPEKA WOMAN SAYS HER COMPLETE RECOVERY FROM FOUR YEARS OF STOMACH TROUBLE IS DUE ENTIRELY TO TANLAC.

"Thanks to Tanlac, I enjoy better health than in years," said Mrs. Mary Desch, 101 Chandler St., Topeka, Kan.
"For four years I suffered dreadfully with stomach trouble. I had scarcely any appetite and after every meal I would puff up with gas which pressed against my heart until I could hardly get my breath. My kidneys bothered me a great deal and there was a pain across the small of my back which made it hard for me to get up or down. My head ached nearly all the time. I had awful dizzy spells and could not do any housework."
"Tanlac gave me such a fine appetite I now eat anything I want and it all agrees with me. My kidneys are in perfect condition and I can do all my housework. I shall never miss a chance to praise this grand medicine."
Tanlac is sold by all good druggists.

Bee Want Ads Are Best Business Boosters

certs and their popularity is attested to by numerous letters of appreciation received by the radio editor of The Bee. For instance:
"Dear Sir: From 19 to 12 persons have enjoyed every one of your concerts which you have broadcast from the Omaha Grain Exchange. The station seems to have a very fine sounding set as we can always get them in clear and strong regardless of any atmospheric conditions.
"Your program last Friday night was particularly enjoyable and very distinct. Trusting you will continue the good work, we are,
"Yours very truly,
SWAN, CLOVIS B. SWAN, Atlantic, Ia."
Here's another:
"I heard your program very plainly last Tuesday night and enjoyed it very much. Trusting to hear more of them, I am, OTTO THORNE, Ute, Neb."
Numerous other letters show that The Bee concerts have been enjoyed as far west as Grand Island and Cheyenne, while towns within 50 miles of Kansas City have listened in on the programs.

Leaders in Huge Waterway Plan Still Confident

Progress on Project Cannot Be Stopped, Chalmers Says, After Action of Canadian Minister.

Washington, May 31.—Representative Chalmers, Ohio, one of the enthusiastic leaders in congress for the St. Lawrence waterway project, said yesterday that the announcement by McKenzie King, prime minister of Canada, that the time is not considered opportune for entering into negotiations with the United States for a treaty relating to the waterway, cannot stop progress on the project.
This announcement from McKenzie King, said Representative Chalmers, "is merely an incident in the final accomplishment of the great American seaway."
"The project is too big and too important for any one man or set of men or any state or any part of a state to stop."
"The great project is now under way. This announcement may cause some delay, but the needs of the great Canadian dominion will not permit any selfish interests of its eastern section to block the canal. Of course, it is well known that Montreal and Quebec are against the project, but Canada is not and will not be. No man or set of men will be able to get permanently in the way of this great commercial movement."

Ottawa, Ont., May 31.—Included in correspondence relative to the St. Lawrence waterways project, tabled in the house yesterday, was a letter from Secretary of State Hughes stating that President Harding "favours the negotiation of a treaty to be framed on the basis of the report of the joint commission, or modifications as might be agreed upon." Table Hughes Letter.

The tabling of the correspondence grew out of the reply made to the United States Monday by the prime minister that the Canadian government is of the opinion "that it would not appear to be expedient to deal with this matter at the present time."
The letter of Secretary Hughes suggests that if the present proposal is not deemed desirable, some other basis of agreement which will expedite the project might be arrived at, and states that it might be practicable to conclude a treaty pledging the two governments to undertake the execution of the project, with the provision "for a joint commission charged with the duty of formulating such a complete plan which would be subject to the approval of the two governments prior to the beginning of the work of construction."
