

POINTS IN POLITICS.

It seems to be generally agreed among the politicians that John T. Mallalieu and Professor W. E. Andrews will be the republican nominees for congress in the Sixth and Fifth districts respectively. In the Sixth, James Whitehead, the nominee two years ago, is not a candidate. Matt Dougherty is about the only prominent aspirant besides Mallalieu, and it is predicted that he will withdraw in the latter's favor. Mallalieu, who for several years has been the superintendent of the reform school at Kearney, admittedly one of the best conducted institutions in the state, has many elements of strength as a congressional candidate. He has a particularly wide acquaintance; is a good talker, and he has the faculty of making friends easily. He is fortified in every way to meet the opposition of Kem, or whoever will be the opposing candidate, and while it is idle to assert that he would be elected easily if nominated, it is the opinion of well informed members of the state central committee that he would have a good fighting chance to win. It is generally conceded that Mallalieu would be a stronger candidate than anybody else who could be nominated. He is looked upon as the kind of material that ought to be sent to Washington. Andrews, after his experience with McKeighan two years ago, is undoubtedly the proper man to again meet the wily congressman. He is popular throughout the district, and his force on the stump makes him especially well fitted for an anti-McKeighan crusade. He is another candidate who will not have an easy time; but it is not improbable that he will be successful.

The fact that Representative Wardlaw, of Gage county, is a candidate for re-nomination, recalls the fact that but for this conspicuous traitor Thurston would have been elected United States senator at the last session of the legislature, and William V. Allen would have been left in that obscurity where he rightfully belongs. Algernon Sidney Paddock having once satisfied himself that his reelection was impossible determined to defeat Thurston at all hazards, regardless of the interests of the republican party, and this man who for nearly a quarter of a century had been honored by the republican party deliberately betrayed it, and allowed an Allen to go to Washington to misrepresent Nebraska, to gratify a petty spite. His treacherous tactics found an ally in Wardlaw, who became a mere puppet of the renegade senator. It is to be hoped that Gage county will not disgrace itself by returning Wardlaw to the legislature. Wardlaw's vote cast properly would have made it possible to elect a republican to succeed Paddock; he was guided by base motives, and he made it possible for the demo-pops to elect Allen.

The following call for the annual convention of the state league of republican clubs has been issued:

STATE HEADQUARTERS, LINCOLN, NEB., April 12, 1894.—To Republican State League Clubs and all Republicans: "In compliance with a provision of the constitution of the National Republican league, establishing an annual convention, and in accordance with the instructions of the last national convention, supplemented by the action of the executive committee representing all the states and territories, the seventh annual convention of the National Republican League of the United States, is called to meet in the city of Denver, Colorado, Tuesday, June 26, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m., and continue its sessions until its business is completed.

The ratio of representation will be six delegates-at-large, from each State and Territory, and four from each Congressional District, and one from each College Republican club in the United States."

The State League of Nebraska will meet in the city of Lincoln, Tuesday June 12, at 10 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of electing thirty delegates to the National League meeting, and for the transaction of such other business as required by the constitution.

The ratio of representation will be five delegates from each club having less than one hundred members, and one additional delegate for each additional fifty members or major fraction thereof.

The following are ex-officio members viz: The president, secretary and treasurer of each club.

In issuing a call to the Republican State League clubs and all republicans, we feel confident that at the present time we are addressing a very large majority of the people of our state.

There is no place where education comes so high as in the school of experience. The experimental political school of the past two years has graduated, into the time honored republican party, a greater number of honest, thoughtful men than has ever been known in the history of any political organization.

The great body of the people who were dazzled by the false cry of republican misrule and tariff robbery, and the glittering democratic promise of better times, cheaper goods, higher wages, and the sophistry and hypocrisy of more money have for the past year experienced the result, and are now impatiently awaiting the opportunity to aid by their votes in the grand work of rebuilding the tottering temple of American industries and the restoration of American progress and prosperity. To that end they instinctively turn to that party that by wise and careful legislation has dignified American labor, built up a sound financial policy, and established a credit which has been the envy of the financial world, a party that for thirty years run this great government without resorting to issuing millions of dollars of bonds to pay its annual running expenses.

The Republican League stands ready to take the first step in preparing to meet the great national emergency that confronts us, and with that end in view we earnestly request active organization of Republican League clubs in all parts of the state and that you send full delegations to our State League meeting.

BRAD. D. SLAUGHTER,

Secretary.

I. W. LANSING,

President.

It is expected that between one and two thousand delegates will be in attendance upon this convention, and the republican state central committee having interested itself in the matter, the convention will be made an occasion of political significance. An effort is being made to secure the presence of Tom Reed, and if he cannot be present, some other prominent republican will be here. Leading republicans from all over the state, in addition to the officers and members of the state central committee, have signified their intention of attending the convention. This meeting will be the formal opening of the republican campaign, a campaign that will be the most memorable in the history of the state. The arrangements for the big convention, the reception and entertainment of delegates, etc., will fall largely upon the Young Men's Republican club of this city, and a meeting of the club will be held in the near future to make the necessary arrangements.

Church Howe has been in Lincoln this week, and as a natural consequence there has been a noticeable increase of Howe congressional talk. Howe is the second choice of a great many Lancaster county republicans.

As a general rule, the business man is hardly ever thought of in connection with gubernatorial honors. It is the politician who usually aspires to head the party ticket. But in the present ante-convention campaign several names prominent in business circles are frequently mentioned. One of these gentlemen is Hon. I. M. Raymond, of this city, a business man and a republican known in every county of the state. Omaha has also such a man in the person of Hon. George W. Lininger, whose name has been mentioned quite frequently of late in connection with the gubernatorial nomination. Mr. Lininger is recognized as one of the successful business men of the metropolis, and his friends claim that he would bring to the office the same business integrity that he has always shown in his relations with his fellow business men of Omaha. Mr. Lininger may not be Omaha's choice, but if he should be, that city would have the honor of presenting to the state convention a man whose record as a business man, as a citizen, and as a republican, is unassailable. The state has need of business men in its public offices and the interests of the people would be better served in many instances if men like Lininger, Raymond and others of the same class were oftener elected to office.

At least one Lincoln lady has embraced the latest fad—that of wearing a live chamelon, tied by a tiny chain to the dress.

Charity isn't the only thing that ought to begin at home.

Many rise in the morning with a headache and no inclination for breakfast. This is due to a torpidity of the liver and a deranged condition of the stomach. To restore healthy action to these organs, nothing is so efficacious as an occasional dose of Ayer's Pills.
