Quite an amusing story has just leaked out, the principal of which is a young woman who rather affects the manners and habits of the sterner sex. In the spring she joined a large party for a continental tour. The chaperone lived in an eastern town and was unknown to the would be traveler, so all the arrangements appertaining to the trip were carried on by letter, the young woman sometimes signing her christian name, which might be given to either gender, and sometimes simply an initial, and giving as reference one of our large dailies with which she was connected. A few days previous to her departure the following telegram was received:

To M— B.—Care of World-Herald.

Are you a man or a woman? Answer.—P.

It seems that when the manager of the party came to the signing of the staterooms an answer to the above question was deemed of some importance.
