

SALE OF THE LOSS

BURLINGTON CAR ACCOUNTANTS

Lincoln will lose the Burlington's car accountants office next month. The office will be moved to Chicago and there consolidated with the "Q" and Missouri lines offices.

Information relating to the proposed move is no longer a secret. It will be made some time in May. It is estimated that it will require two weeks' time to make the transfer.

"It is believed that better service can be given by consolidation," said a Burlington official Tuesday night.

For a long time the Lincoln car accountants office has been a headache for quarters. For a time it was hoped the building of a new depot building would relieve the congestion.

Members of the athletic board at the university are looking up the possibility of building a new building. More room became necessary as the business grew and it was recognized that the old building was not made to accommodate the clerks.

People who heard the news of the removal remembered that not a great while ago Vice President Roosevelt, a member of the Burlington visited Lincoln headquarters and spent a day in looking over the local offices.

F. M. Lucore, car accountant for the Burlington lines west of the river, had 4,192 miles under his jurisdiction.

There have been many unlooked for changes in the west since Mr. Hill took charge of the Burlington. The policy of concentrating the operating and traffic departments in Chicago has never to have been abandoned for one minute since the merger took place.

The removal of the car accountants' force to Chicago may postpone the building of a new depot for Lincoln. A large part of the existing depot building was occupied by this office, and its removal will leave a vacancy there.

MRS. PATRICK CAMPBELL

"THE JOY OF LIVING" PRODUCED AT THE OLIVER THEATRE.

When a preacher announces to his congregation "You will find our text in so and so," he opens with an epigrammatic statement of the story to follow.

The play is by Hermann Sudermann, a German dramatist of the realistic order. The title in the original "Die Lebens Lust" strictly translated means "The Joy of Living."

As above stated the main theme dwells strongly on the beauty of the life of individuals. Her note is the voice within us that bids us live our own lives, disregarding loudly and self-accusation as the result of the crowd's opinion.

Perhaps the worst side of the whole play is that the woman is permitted to be a free agent. There was a time when a woman was not permitted to be a free agent.

The first thing noticeable about Mrs. Campbell is her challenging personality. Likewise her beauty. In her acting there is never a moment in which she moves away from the center of the stage.

Whether participating in the action or for a moment being out of it, there is no actor who is not in perfect accord with the character. Indeed the fitness of the play, of "business" is quite unerring throughout.

It should not be difficult for a calm and unbiased observer to see in Mrs. Campbell's artistic methods far more than the highest average of ability. Forced into summing her up epigrammatically for lack of space or other reason, we would say she was a genius slightly fettered by complacency.

The impersonation of several characters other than Countess Berta was favorably commented on by the knowing ones in the packed house. Absence of sudden outbursts of passion probably accounts for the fact that she was so well received.

There may have been those in the audience who, though thoroughly interested in play and players, still had vague notions as to what the play was all about.

Probably the most interesting member of the party was little Pinky Pankey. For at least more attention was paid to the little fluffy white haired animal as he promenade through the lobby.

The audience that filled the Oliver completely last night was probably a record-breaker for the season in several ways. It was informed of the play through the medium of a newspaper article that had had the price demanded to see the show, and to see it had dressed in its best.
