Miss Edith Gourley entertained the members of the Union Literary society Saturday evening at her home.

A COMMUNICATION.

Editor Daily Nebraskan:
When other sources of information are closed it is customary to resort to the newspapers, they being regarded as the ultimate fountain-head of knowledge.

My query is this: Are library rules at present so construed as to bar from entrance to the main library a graduate student, or anyone not registered in an academic course?

In company with another student, an alumnus of the University, who like myself, pays a tuition of nearly $50 a year, I entered the library the other day. Neither of us spoke to the other nor to any other person, but made our way in a manner quite sedate compared to the conduct of rather active individuals about us.

We were challenged by the librarian and requested to divulge our business within the walls. Further, we were informed that we should not walk through the library, and if on any occasion we should desire to communicate with any person in the library, we should wait for him outside. This would clearly in many cases necessitate a camping outside for three or four hours. Such a ukase being so extremely startling, we retreated, postponing an investigation until a later date.

AN ALUMNUS.

Not a Leap-Year Affair

The misconception has arisen that the band concert to be held in the Oliver theatre next Monday evening is to be a leap year function, and several men students have refrained from purchasing tickets in the expectancy that some one else would do it for them. The Nebraska is authorized to state, that, notwithstanding the significance of the date, it is not the intention of the management of the band to make a leap year affair out of the concert. Admission will be 25, 35 and 50 cents. Those wishing box seats should see L. J. Pepperberg at once, in order that any decorations desired may be arranged for.

The concert already promises to be a big success, and the band has excellent prospects of clearing a neat sum toward its Temple Fund pledges.

Juniors Elect Officers.

The Juniors met yesterday morning to elect officers. In spite of the clash between factions which occurred last semester, utmost harmony prevailed yesterday and the following officers were elected: John Allen, president; O. N. Mather, vice president; Leon Pepperberg, treasurer; Miss Thomas, secretary, and M. J. Brown, sergeant-at-arms.

Only one nominee came up for each office except that of president, where Hanlen contested with Allen, the latter securing the office by a vote of 38 to 16.
