AT CONVOCAATION

Dr. Ross Discussed "The Open and Closed Shop."

A large number of students were in attendance at chapel to listen to the discussion of Dr. Ross, on "The Open and Closed Shop." He brought out the economic merits of labor and labeled it a commodity which was bought and sold as any other product. The poor man, he said, has the labor to sell and the rich man must buy it. The poor man has no reserve to fall back upon, while the man who buys his services has. Labor, like anything else, can be sold in the lump, which we call wholesale traffic, and the organization of labor unions places it in a position to be handled in that manner. There are many defects in the individual labor commodity, which are detrimental to the poor workman and the union serves as a means of bettering these conditions.

"The labor unions are an organization," he continued, "for the purpose of making right some wrong. There is much argument for and against the combine. The argument against it being somewhat of an infringement on the rights and liberties of the people by not working and compelling others to do likewise, also forcing employers to employ all union labor or non-union labor. On the other hand they are good because they adjust many of the grievances of the laboring man. They have become well organized. They have brought about a better wage system with shorter hours and eliminating inferior workmen."

The talk was instructive and well learned something of the great labor problem which has become an issue in our national politics.

Academy Notes.

At the chapel exercises Monday morning the principal entered a gentle complaint over the small attendance. It afforded him much gratification to receive at the close a number of excellent suggestions as to means by which these exercises can be made more attractive. The attendance of Academy students upon the University convocations is increasing and rightly for these helpful and inspiring half-hours are well worth the slight effort required. Is it possible that young people are growing less reverent, less appreciative of the obligations resting upon them? Rather it is probably due to the rush and whirl of university life, which distracts the mind.

Saturday afternoon the first Academy team dares to confront the University Midgets in deadly basket ball struggle. Tickets have been selling rapidly in Academy circles. Ushers in dainty white have been appointed, patronesses have accepted the honor and all things are now ready for 2:30 o'clock Saturday afternoon.

Mr. T. K. Holden, for persistent neglect of work, has been requested to leave the Academy. What a pity some young fellows fail to appreciate the sacrifice of parents and the wealth of opportunity for culture and information and instead prefer temporary ease and fun.

This is an interesting week for Academy students. Last evening the final preliminaries took place, by which the three "best" men were selected for the Y. M. C. A. contest. At the hour of writing this article no decision had been reached.

The young women meet Friday afternoon for the monthly social hour at the home of Mrs. Hodgman, 700 North 16th street.

The Academy laboratory will be used for the chemistry work in the University summer school.
