The Woman Student at Michigan

The University of Michigan's present ideal for her woman students, which has been evolved from her three decades of co-education, is fairly well known throughout the west. Some phases of it can perhaps be restated to advantage from time to time as conditions vary. The type of women students at Michigan has changed somewhat since 1872, during the last decade especially. When Michigan's doors were first opened to women, all who came, came for study, for work. With the growing popularity of education for women, and with the prosperity of this part of the country, the "boarding school type" of girl has come on the scene. The other type is not fewer in numbers than formerly, though the proportion is less. The boarding school girl, the girl who needs to be made to study, who needs a considerable number of rules laid down for her guidance—granting that a considerable number of rules for conduct is ever valuable for an educational institution—is fortunately pretty small in aggregate, and the discipline at Michigan can reasonably be fixed with a view to the other and better type. Michigan has government, on the Jeffersonian principle that in general the fewer the laws the better off the community. At Michigan the women's building is coming to play a more and more important part in the life of the women. The present women's dean, on taking up her duties, made the women's building her official headquarters. The result has been beneficial to both men and women. There can be no doubt that in their own building, with a large office and without the disturbance caused by men students coming and going, the dean and the women students have come into much closer relations than ever in the past. In every way it has been sought to make the building the headquarters for all the social life of the University in which the women take part. The women's building, or Barbour gymnasium, as it is interchangeably called, is open for any University function, such as class or organization social or hops, and there is no charge for the use of it except for janitor's fees. As it is unexcelled for such purposes by any hall in the city, and as the expense of using it is almost nothing, it has become the most popular of places for such uses. The hours of its use can be controlled, and are controlled. A limit of 12 o'clock is fixed for the close of all entertainments. The women's dean is always present. As rules unsupported by public sentiment are always failures, and as a healthy public sentiment among the student body can be greatly furthered and much more easily maintained by the close relationship between those responsible for the girls, and the girls themselves, and as the women's building is steadily and to a really remarkable degree serving more and more as a means of bringing the women of the University into close and sympathetic understanding with the women's dean, the question of controlling the social life of the women at Michigan seems to be fairly well settled.

Grill Room Will Not Be Open.

Some bright individual, a fair co-ed, perhaps, made a discovery yesterday to the effect that the grill room at the Lincoln hotel will not be open tonight, and of course she told it. Investigation proves the truth of the discovery, and so there will be nothing doing tonight at the Senior Prom. In the line of grill room patronage. The cafe is being moved to a new location at the Capitol hotel and will not be open tonight.

Speaking of the Prom, dancing will begin early. This isn't said simply to insure commencing at 10:30, but to let you know that dancing will begin early.

Delian Program Tonight.

Miss Blanchard of Beatrice has been secured by the Delian Literary society to give an entertainment the coming Friday evening in the Delian hall. Her specialty is whistling, and from what we hear of her, she is an adept in that line.

The entertainment is to be free to everybody, and it is hoped that the hall will be well filled.

An excellent program is promised and will undoubtedly be given.
