Editorial Remarks

A final word. Do not forget the Glee Club Concert tonight. The Glee Club is one of the most deserving of University organizations and return should be made for the good work that it is striving to do. The entertainment provided will be of the highest quality, and it is the duty of everyone to come out and show the members of this organization that their efforts are appreciated.

The K. U. Weekly says the following in regard to the debate with Nebraska: "It was the hardest fought contest ever held between the two Universities, and the judges last night reached their decisions only after forty-five minutes' consultation. The debate was well attended and the audience was enthusiastic. The Kansas boys expressed themselves as more than satisfied with the treatment received from their opponents."

The outgoing editor of the Minnesota Daily leaves the following advice to his successor as to what not to do. There is quite a bit of newspaper philosophy in them, and some of the injunctions given are quite true to life in college journalism. It is the experience of one who has been through the mill, and we believe that there is quite a bit of sense in the greater part of the things that are said. Here are the things that a college editor should not do:

Don't let the business manager make you accept shoes and meal tickets in stead of coin of the realm.

Don't let the cub reporters jolly you. Don't pay any attention to your critics.

Don't get the idea that you are the Godfather of the University.

Don't make any friends—they are a bother when you want to roast something.

The baseball team has taken a brace in time to win some splendid victories before returning home and to offset to an encouraging degree the poor start that it made. While its work has been erratic at times, there is no doubt that we have a fast and speedy organization of players who can make a good impression wherever they go, provided they play in their true form. The boys were unfortunate at the start, owing to the long delay and lack of opportunity to practice, and hence the changing of the tide in their favor can be all the more readily welcomed. One favorable trait that they have shown is that they have gained strength instead of lost it, as often happens to baseball teams touring away from home. The victories that they have won have been of the most desirable and creditable character. What weakness the team has shown can not in full be excused, as athletic teams are always obliged to stand on the record that they make, and extenuating circumstances may explain, but not better conditions. We are glad that the team has showed that it has mettle and quality, and was able to play good ball upon the occasions that it did. In view of the brilliant victories that it has already won, the team has earned much credit for itself and should be properly welcomed on its return.
