THE SUMMER SESSION.

Important Communication Con-cerning the Work.

To those interested in the Summer School, the following communication, which was published some time ago in the Journal, will be of interest:

Having received notices from time to time concerning the University Summer School, I cannot refrain from commenting on the course on superintendence to be offered in the coming session. This is certainly a step in advance in the matter of summer training of teachers. There has long been a crying need of just such an available course in the university. The course as at present outlined contemplates a series of practical talks on everyday problems of the school by men who are spending their lives in that kind of work. The plan is a unique one so far as giving such work in the university is concerned, yet the need of it is so apparent as to appeal to everyone who has in charge the training of teachers, and to all who have to employ untrained teachers. The opportunities for trained teachers are greater today than ever before, and such a course will certainly be an added opportunity for all who contemplate attending the summer session of the university.

Such a course, to prove helpful, must be conducted by men fresh from the field of battle, men who are daily confronted with the problems of which they speak. No one will question the value of a thorough knowledge of pedagogy and psychology. Every progressive teacher must have such knowledge. Just having the knowledge, however, is not sufficient. One must be able to apply it in practice. Nothing contributes more helpfully toward rightly applying knowledge than ascertaining just how those in the work apply it. A teacher must not only know how to plan but she must built wisely on the plan. Indeed, such a common-sense idea ought to become permanently fixed as a part of the training offered to those who are preparing to teach. Certainly Inspector Crabtree deserves great credit for planning the present course and Professor Hodgman as director of the summer session, is to be congratulated on embodying so practical an idea in the course of study. The school men of Nebraska, who have to assume more or less responsibility for recommending teachers to their boards, ought to welcome such a practical departure with enthusiasm, and ambitious teachers certainly will show their appreciation by attending the session in larger numbers than ever before.

Superintendent Wahoo Schools.

Sends List of Judges.

Negotiations preliminary to the debate with Washington are progressing well. Our list of judges from which Washington will make a selection of one, contains six names of prominent college instructors and was forwarded to St. Louis yesterday evening. Our list includes five college presidents, representing three states. The team leaves on the 11th and all desiring to accompany it should make known the fact at once.

DR. GREENE WILL SPEAK.

Will Address the Mens' Mass Meeting Sunday.

At the men's meeting in Memorial Hall next Sunday at 3 p. m., Dr. J. L. Greene will give the address which he was compelled to postpone three weeks ago. His subject, as was announced before, is "A Thing Every Man Ought to Know."

Dr. Greene is a man of charming personality and an excellent speaker. He is a specialist of reputation in his line of work and one who has studied his subject thoroughly. His vast experience also lends much to make his addresses clear and instructive.

The subject which Dr. Greene has chosen for this occasion is one which ought to interest every man in the university. There are many things which we as men ought to know if we would make our lives the best possible. It is from men of Dr. Greene's character and ability that such knowledge may be gained.

The musical feature of the meeting will be some vocal selections by Mr. Bradford. Those who have heard Mr. Bradford sing will certainly avail themselves of the opportunity of hearing him again.

This meeting is one of the most important of the year and every seat in Memorial Hall should be taken. Every man is invited.

The Palladian Literary Society will not meet in the hall Friday evening, but will attend the Glee Club in a body.

The new song books will be used this morning at convocation.

All the boys are pleased with the extra quality of the army hat which B. L. Paine is supplying this season. If you are going to camp better go there and get your size. They are only 90c.
