The question of the value of rooting is being raised in eastern colleges. One prominent alumnus of Cambridge believes that the value of organized rooting is often overrated. Unless there is the feeling and enthusiasm back of the rooting he asserts that it has no value. But other colleges refuse to corroborate this opinion. It is still believed "that to cheer and keep on cheering makes for a winning team."

Interest has been revived in the university historical collection of the museum by the presentation from one of Stanford's earliest graduates of his entire collection of souvenirs and memorabilia of his student life. The donor, F. B. Wooden, '95, was one of the very few who retained the various programs, posters, papers and the like, which characterized the first generation of student life.

A noteworthy event occurred at the University of Minnesota last Saturday evening. Not only was it the anniversary of the completion of the second decade of President Northrup's work at the university, but also the anniversary of his wedding and his birthday. A large reception was tendered the president by the students, the alumni and the faculty.
