Editorial Remarks

OUR ALL-CLASS TEAM.

The Nebraskan's effort to pick a representative all-class football team seems to have met the reception always accorded like attempts. The challenge which we publish on the first page of today's issue exemplifies what we mean.

Although our all-class team was gotten up more as a satire than anything else (since interest in class athletics can hardly be said to really justify such a list) it was, nevertheless, selected by a person closely interested in The Nebraskan, and one thoroughly

Again, the All-Class team was a joke, but not so senseless a one after all.

It must be evident to the members of the Junior class that by their indifference in the matter of '07 caps, they are inviting just criticism. The class as a whole owes this debt, but as individuals they fail to assume the responsibility. It is certainly not to their credit that they should shift their debt upon one or two, who are under no just obligation to take the burden.

When the class instructed the committee to destroy the '07 caps, they must have known that someone would have to stand for the consequences. No one would deny that all this is true, but the trouble lies with the individual members, who do not feel any personal responsibility in the matter.

There is now a plan under way whereby the class may have a chance to wake up and show its spirit. The Junior caps are to be sold so that a slight profit may be realized on each one. The money thus resulting will go toward repaying those who have settled with the dealers for the '07 caps. If a sufficient number of the class respond, it is estimated that the debt may be cleared.

The indifference of the Juniors has already been remarked in various places by various people. At the informal given for the purpose of raising funds for this, the response was not what it should have been from the Junior class. It is said that the plan of levying a uniform tax would be impracticable because of the difficulty of collecting. It would seem that the class ought to wake up now to its opportunity of showing that it really has as much spirit as any class in school. Let the class assume its honest debt, and be ashamed to shift it to the shoulders of its committee.

ber of the staff, and one thoroughly football player in the university, though not a member of our staff. Our football player in the university. Our athletic editor, Mr. Swealey, had nothing to do with the selection of the team, as is stated in the article on the front page of this issue, and very probably would not have chosen the same list as that printed by us yesterday.

Nevertheless, The Nebraskan has no desire to, disclaim responsibility for the All-Class team. All the men on it have displayed excellent football ability and have attracted much attention in every game in which they have played. They are the choice of one man, to be sure, and probably would not be the invariable choice of every critic in the university, but they would doubtless do themselves credit in any game in which they might be matched.
