Editorial Remarks

With this issue a new staff takes charge of The Daily Nebraskan. It is the purpose to make the daily a representative paper of the university. Every department will be represented on the staff, and it is the earnest wish of the editors that the students cooperate with the staff. Only by the cooperation of the students can a paper be a live, effective representative of the university, and this powerful student co-operation is what we want.

Just at this time of the year the Senior and Junior Annual Boards are getting down to hard work, and a word as to what is to be expected from the student body may not be amiss.

Nebraska, with 2,500 students, turns out annuals that cannot compare favorably with those of colleges much smaller. This is due to but one thing—the total failure of student support. No one can doubt that the editors and managers of the annuals at this university are as talented and capable as those in any other university in the west, but despite their utmost efforts they cannot turn out a creditable book when the student body not only give them no help, but even throw obstacles in their way once in a while, and seem to delight in knocking on the boards.

At many other colleges the average student will at least take the trouble to hand some good roast or jolly to a member of the annual board if he happens to run across it. He doesn't do that at this university. Not much! He saves it up until after the annual appears and then knocks on it because it hasn't got a roast in it as good as the one he found floating around. And at some schools any student who can draw a little or push a pen will let the board have his productions, but not so at Nebraska. Here the editor hunts up the half-dozen artists who are always patient and good-hearted enough to draw for the annuals, and that half-dozen do all the drawing that is done. And as for stories—the board never has the temerity to ask any one for one now.

But the boards have gotten educated up to the point now where they know better than waste energy in pulling anything out of anyone else, and now write all the stories, jokes, roasts, write-ups, and histories themselves. But there are some things that cannot be done even by a phenomenal editorial staff. They cannot carry a kodak around and stake a snap-shot of every classmate in order to get half-tones, nor can they tell where a man comes from by looking at him, unless he is a Freshman with the ever-present high school pin, and of course no one cares where the Freshman comes from.
