Editorial Remarks

The Seniors, Juniors and Sophomores, realizing the necessity of prompt reorganization for the new semester, met yesterday and, electing officers, placed themselves on a firm basis for the remainder of the year. It is a conceded fact that all the knowledge brought to the University comes via the Freshies, and perhaps it is presuming greatly to criticize this all-wise body, yet there is room for criticism. Ever since '08 organized it has been little in evidence. Hardly a trace of the usual freshman activity has been exhibited; in fact, about the only real sign of life apparent in the ranks of the embryonic sheep-skin aspirants was at the time of the Freshman party, and then these signs of life were evident on the part of only a very few Freshies and the Sophs were the impelling power in this instance. Of course the Soph is always with us, and always ready, should it be absolutely necessary, to again furnish impelling power, but this outside influence, while beneficial at times, should not always be resorted to. The different classes are organized for active, effective work, not for a mere passive existence. It is about as hard to instill new spirit into a dead class organization as it is to bring a corpse to life, and the sooner the Freshmen learn this and put their knowledge to practical use the quicker.
