Welcome.

On behalf of the University at large the Daily Nebraskan extends a hearty welcome to the new student, and trusts that he may realize as nearly as human may those dreams of college life which have hovered over him for the last three months. But if this be impossible, let him remember that the fault lies, not with the University, but with his dreams, and that he is here for work and not for play. He time which the work will require.

Besides the regular staff members, there will be a number of reporters who will not have so much work to do, and will be in line for positions on the staff next year.

The only requirements of candidates for these positions are that they be up in their class work.

Anybody desiring to try for any place on the Nebraskan should see the editor-in-chief as soon as possible in the Nebraskan office at the east end of the second floor of the main building.

Mr. Dirk's reception was most cordial every place he visited, and he was much pleased with his trip. The only difficulty he had in arranging for the appearance of his club was at Seattle, where the annual farce of the Junior class of the University of Washington had been set for the only evening on which the club could appear. As this farce is the great event will doubtless find it a great change from the high school to the University, and he will make many mistakes, but in those mistakes he will find those ready to help him and he will finally come to realize that we are all one big family and that the University is indeed our Alma Mater.

Journalists, Attention!

The Daily Nebraskan is now entering upon a new year, and a number of positions on the staff are to be filled. These places are absolutely open to all, within certain restrictions placed by the board of regents, and any one having the journalistic flea in his ear has a chance to attain the dizzy eminence of a chief editorship if he is willing to work.

This year it will be possible for every member of the staff to obtain University credit for whatever work he may do on the paper and this should obviate all difficulty as to the of the year at that University, it seemed hopeless to try to effect a change, but Mr. Dirks collected as many Juniors as he could find in the city and persuaded them to consent to a substitution of attractions.

The twenty-five men who will make the trip will travel in an elegantly appointed hotel car, with another car for baggage.

The first step in the selection of the members of the club will be taken next week, when a mass meeting of all the students will be held, and interest aroused. Then the try-outs will occur, and a committee composed of Mr. Gillespie, the director, Mr. Williams, the president, and Mr. Dirks will select the men. It is intended that the positions shall not go to men who have good voices alone, but rather to those who are thorough gentlemen.

No man admits that he gets more than he expected, unless it is something he did not want at all.
