A LIMITED AFFAIR.

The pleasure of University Night was somewhat marred by the overcrowded condition of the Temple Theatre. As to whether this condition was due to a misunderstanding as to the time of the performance, to a misrepresentation on the part of the management, or to the increasing popularity of the affair, cannot be determined. Suffice it to say that such was the case and that it has caused more or less grumbling on the part of those who attended, or tried to do so.

Would it not be a good scheme to issue tickets for this event—tickets to admit only students or members of the faculty? This is strictly a school affair; it was instituted by students; it is planned by students, and the material made use of interests only the students and faculty members. It is so seldom that the widely scattered members of this University have the opportunity of assembling that everything favorable to such a gathering should be done. The theatre is, at best, sadly inadequate to the demand; it seats only a few hundred of the four thousand students who are interested in the affairs of this school. Under such conditions it would seem advisable to exclude townspeople and high school students, who composed an uncomfortably large proportion of Saturday's audience.

We do not propose such a measure with an idea of exclusiveness, but rather with the idea of affording greater pleasure and comfort to those for whom the event is scheduled. It must be also borne in mind that the representations and jokes which are perpetrated, and the character of the burlesques which are staged, appeal primarily only to the student. The business man or high school youth is not particularly impressed with the fact that Professor _____ is represented as chewing his pencil, or that a certain prominent junior is accused of trodding the paths of society; the dramatic efforts are wasted on listeners of this type. And while they are reclining in their front row seats, trying to conceal their yawns, a corresponding number of fuming students are straining at the rear entrance of the theatre, trying to catch sight or sound of the performance in which they are so vitally interested.

For these, and other reasons, it seems necessary that some measure be taken whereby as many students as possible would be able to witness this event, which is distinctly their own.

Must Learn How to Spell.

The University of Colorado has instituted a spelling class for its freshmen. As the students enroll in the university they are given a very rigid examination in spelling. Those who fail become members of this special class.

LOOKING TO CLASS BASEBALL.

It Must Make Up for Lack of Real University Product.

With University baseball probably only a memory as far as concerns this year, lovers of the national sport are beginning to look forward with interest to the inter-class series. There is an abundance of good material in the institution and it is believed that all of this can be brought out for these inter-class games. Last year's sophomore class, now the junior, which won the series in 1911, is confident of repeating this season, as the team has a large share of its old material back with the addition of several fast new players.

Inter-fraternity baseball games will likely attract much more attention this year than heretofore because of the anticipated lack of University ball. No plans have yet been made for the inter-fraternity series.

Music Students Aid Paper.

The Folio, the new paper being published by the School of Music, has a rapidly growing subscription list. Over one-half the number enrolled have paid-up subscriptions to their credit and letters are daily bringing new subscriptions from alumni. An addition may be made soon if the support continues to warrant it.

The editorial department is taken care of by a staff of girls with one of the professors as advisor.
