NOT A "SELL."

Some student with an abnormally developed sense of humor has, wittingly or unwittingly, sought to cast reflection upon the honesty and veracity of the "Rag."

This he accomplished by portraying, with artistic touch, upon the "historical" rock, a mystical hand. This foul deed was done in the spirit of fun, but it wrought havoc in the offices of the publication, whose staff was kept busy yesterday explaining that the story of the footprint was not a myth, but the statement of a fact. "Truth is stranger than fiction."

The print is there, on the southeast corner of the rock; it is the impression of a left foot (or hand), and as the character of the member will prove, is not the work of stone cutters or nature fakers. Let us reiterate—we did not chisel out the image, nor did we call attention of the readers merely to "sell" them. The phenomenon has been there for many centuries.

SIGNS OF THE SEASON.

That time of the school year is now here when John, or Mary, as the case may be, appends to the letter home:

"I expect to get a job as soon as the train stops at the home depot; in fact, my conscience has been hurting me for several months, and I will be very glad to get out and earn enough to support myself for the summer."

P. S. "I hope to earn enough to pay part of next year's expenses."

Or, as Mary might add:

"I have bought the dearest piece of goods for a summer dress. I'll have to ask for a little more money now, but of course you understand I am really saving money, for the goods are much cheaper here than they are at home. I believe that I will take up plain sewing this summer; you see I have become quite skillful in my sewing at the Farm."

P. S. "Tell father that I will need only two more checks."

(Note—The latter extract is imaginary, but, it is to be hoped, not unjust.)
