A RULE—RANKLING BUT RIGHT.

The eligibility rule is at present playing havoc with several lines of school activities; not only has it deprived the baseball team of several of its most valuable players, but it has also done much damage in dramatic and political circles.

Originally this rule applied only to athletics, but inasmuch as athletics are no more strictly school activities than are dramatics, politics and chairmanships, the scope has been extended to include the latter. Such an innovation naturally caused much comment, more or less of it partaking of the nature of complaint, but its fairness gradually came to be realized and the yoke has been assumed.

Its restrictive power is coming to be felt more and more, especially at this season of the year, when study is a burden and fades into insignificance in comparison with any diversion such as political plotting, baseball playing or rehearsing for a play. The ensuing difficulties may be well illustrated by the problem which recently confronted a class president, who was forced to readjust the personnel of his committees three times before they could pass inspection.

Naturally such restriction receives much criticism, but after all, does it not accomplish a great deal? It prevents the easily influenced student from being carried away by the charm of being before the public; it saves many from the brink of destruction, whereas, if they were allowed to continue they would have to leave school without a hearing. It opens up the proportion between study and "college life," and is simply a statement of the fact that before a man can become famous for outside achievements he has got to "make good" in his studies. In a word, it serves to remind the zealous student of the prime reason for his presence here—an education.

The Misses Frances Larsen, Jeanette Hugg, Iva Layton, Gladys Johnson and Mrs. Wade, girls of the second year cooking class, served their practice dinner yesterday at the H. E. hall. They had for their guests Dr. Wilcox and Professor Frandson and Miss Brown. Miss Richards acted as critic.

The inter-society debate at the Farm, Friday, was presided over by Principal Hunter. The debate was won by the Orphellan team, composed of E. S. Lindburg, Charles Graff and H. Calkins.
