THIS ISSUE.

Today's "Rag" is the first number of the Daily Nebraskan to be edited by the Forest Club. In putting this paper out we have aimed to do away with a great lack of knowledge and indeed even misinformation as to whom we are, what we are doing, as well as the nature of our work. The day was very appropriately chosen to come as close to as possible to Arbor Day, and the more so because Arbor Day is the direct outcome of the efforts of one of Nebraska's most eminent men.

This edition, it must be confessed is an experimental attempt, but it is hoped that it will prove a fruitful precedent and that each spring in the future the club will be able to put out a much larger and better paper than this.

We wish to thank the regular Nebraskan staff for so kindly giving us the use of the paper today.

TOURISTS ENJOY TRIP.

Geology Class Makes Successful and Pleasant Journey to Roca.

The members of the class in Geology 31 who went to Roca Thursday to make a topographical map of that vicinity, returned last evening, dusty, tired and happy, reporting a fine trip in spite of the inclement weather conditions. They were compelled to spend nearly all day Saturday in the shelter of their tents, but made up for this during the other days of the trip. Some excellent specimens of rock were found, making the trip of value on that account also.

MYSTERY OF LETTERS SOLVED.

The mystery of the large letters on the rear wall of Mechanic Arts hall has been cleared up. After much diligent prowling around after the manner of the renowned Sherlock Holmes, it has been found that these letters (all "E's" of various sizes) are being made by C. J. Mowry, senior engineer, in an investigation of electric display advertising and the illumination required to give the best results.

BACK TO THE TALL WOODS

ANNUAL EXODUS OF UNIVERSITY FORESTERS HAS ALREADY BEGUN.

Several students of the Forestry department have already left school to take up their summer's work in forestry. Others will leave from time to time, though the majority will not begin work till after school is out. The Nebraska foresters are keen for practical forestry work, though contrary to the opinion of some, their principal reason is not always a patriotic desire to aid in the construction of the national resources of the nation. The foresters need experience to give them a proper idea of true forestry work and to make them practical working foresters. They need it in working for their degrees at the University of Nebraska and they also need the money. Hence the exodus of the "backwoods student" element.

"Oh, it must be fine to be a forester," say the forestry student's friends. "Think of being able to work out in the mountains all summer. And the forester, unless he has been in a lumber camp of nursery modestly admits that it is great. He knows from experience, however, the limitations to its greatness.

The ordinary camper's life is a picnic; an attempt at least at the tabbed "continuous round of pleasure" and most people have that idea of all mountain life. The forester, however, has learned, probably from his boss that he is not on any picnic, and the oftener he paces distances over steep mountain sides, runs his compass line through stretches of almost impenetrable underbrush, or lets his night work pile up, the more he realizes this fundamental fact. It is this fact which he feels he must in self-justification impress upon his envious friends.

Dr. Bessey to Speak.

Dean Bessey, who was to have spoken at the Y. M. C. A. midweek meeting last week, will speak this week instead, his intended speech having been interrupted by the coming of "Teddy." He will keep the original subject, "The Oldest Church in the World," and in an informal meeting lasting from 8:30 to 9:30, will tell a little of the history of that church which he has seen and visited. There will be special music also.

Botany at Convocation.

The Botanical Seminar will give the program at convocation Friday, April 26. Prof. R. J. Pool will read a paper on "Ecological Studies in the Sand Hills of Nebraska," and Prof. C. E. Bessey will lead in a discussion on "Pronunciation of Botanical Names and Terms."

To Tell of Southern Negro.

Albert Watkins speaks at convocation today on the subject "The State of the Negro in the Cotton Districts," telling conditions as he has seen them and studied them. Mr. Watkins has recently come from Mississippi, leaving there in March while the rivers were on their present rampage.
