VOTE YOUR BELIEFS

WILSON URGES STUDENTS TO LEAVE FALSE STANDARDS.

SPEAKS SATURDAY IN TEMPLE

New Jersey Governor and Presidential Candidate Extends Greetings to Nebraska Students, Speaking as a College Man.

Governor Woodrow Wilson addressed the students in the Temple Theater last Saturday evening. There was a large audience awaiting him, and also a number of outsiders who managed to crowd in. Governor Wilson had first spoken to a large gathering in the Auditorium, and he did not arrive at the Temple until 9:30 p. m.

When Governor Wilson, accompanied by Mr. Bryan and his party, entered the building the students broke into tumultuous applause and repeatedly gave the University yell. The former Princeton president was listened to with respectful attention throughout his speech, all the more because the address was from the standpoint of a college president rather than a political candidate.

"I feel very much complimented by this enthusiastic welcome," said he. "I am sure your vote will be more influential. I am never, as you imagine, brought face to face with a college audience without deep emotion. It is the kind of audiences that I have been associated with during my life, and with whom I have lived. Most American college students wait until they are graduated before they do anything, and until that time they all allow their minds to lie idle."

Governor Wilson then spoke about the non-interest of American students in politics in comparison to students of the European countries, and advocated independent political thought in the universities. "One of the things that distinguish the American college student from the European college student is that nobody particularly cares what the American student thinks about politics." He showed that the European universities are a power in all the great movements of the day in contrast to our own universities.

The tendency of the student to vote as his father has always voted, was dwelt upon at length, and Mr. Wilson said: "What I feel is a hopeful sign of the times is the formation of political clubs and not confined to traditional lines. When I was an undergraduate no one joined a democratic club unless his father was a democrat, and no one joined a republican club unless his father was a republican, so that all our politics was determined by the last generation and not by the present generation."

After Mr. Wilson's address there were loud calls for "Bryan," and Mr. Bryan smilingly arose and responded with a few remarks, after which the party left for the Labor Temple.
