The Cornhusker basketball team has just completed the most successful season which the University has witnessed for some time. Out of about twenty games played only two were lost, one to the Kansas Jayhawkers and the other to Minnesota. The team may be partially excused for their defeat at Minnesota on account of the fact that they had been traveling for two days and had played two extremely rough games in that time. The Cornhusker's defeat at Manhattan by the Jayhawkers was due largely to the fact that the Kansans had lost the first two games of the Missouri Valley series and they were determined to make a last stand at Manhattan. In other words they literally outfought Nebraska.

The basketball season started without any particularly bright prospects but before the first game was played the team had been rounded into fairly good shape. Only two of last year's regular team, Haskell and Carrier, were back in school this year, although there were three other letter men back on the squad. Out of these five men, with several other recruits, Coach Stiehm made a team of championship calibre.

The guard positions were by far the hardest to fill. Captain Carrier of course took his place at left guard but to find a running mate for him was a job which was not complete until Hawkins was found. Hawk proved to be the best scrapper on the team. The other positions were filled most of the time by Stryker at center and Haskell and Underwood at the forwards.

Outside of the Missouri Valley series the team only played two games on their home floor in which they were never in any danger at all of being defeated. These games were the Kansas Aggie and the Wesleyan games. The Wesleyan game was played in the early part of the year before the varsity had started to show the class which they did in later contests. For this reason both coach and players were considerably worried over the outcome and results proved that they had good reason to DAILY—TWO WB be, for although Wesleyan was filled to the brim with confidence still they had something to back it up with and gave the Huskers one of the closest runs of the season.

The Aggie game was the crisis of the season and every member of the team showed up so well in this game that sporting men all over the Valley practically handed Nebraska the championship.

HAROLD CHASES SNIPE

In the meantime Harold, in accordance with instructions from those who had previously been adept at the sport, continued to whistle his to variety of whistles, one of which was to entice the male and the other the female.

Finally, however, some gentleman of the Samaritan variety made a noise said to have resembled that of a wild cat, whereupon Harold decided to return to camp. On being interviewed on his return to college life Mr. Diers asserts that the only thing that prevented him making a success of the sport in this particular instance was the fact that the catch was attempted on too high ground otherwise the attempt would have met with unlimited success without the least doubt.
