Why Foresters Leave Home

Get Your Name in Early for Leather Cornhusker Today

"When you order your 1913 Cornhusker today, be sure that you are the early bird and get a leather-bound book." Such was the statement of Business Manager Kavan last evening in completing the final arrangements for the subscription campaign today and tomorrow. Only 500 of the Edition de Luxe have been contracted for and as the University has already purchased 200 of the leather binding, there will probably be a shortage of the higher priced book before the day is over.

Absolutely no more books will be printed than are ordered today and tomorrow, and this will be the last chance to procure a record of your University year.

The cloth bound annual: $2.00 with an advancement payment of 50 cents. The leather edition: $2.50 with an advancement payment of $1.00. Watch for the Cornhusker tables on the campus.

Seat Sales For "The Watchmakers" Very Satisfactory

When the Oliver box office opened Saturday morning quite a line of students had formed to get the pick of the seats for the annual production of the Kosmet Klub. Many of the University organizations sent freshmen to the Oliver in the early morning to secure a good place in the line.

Fraternities, sororities and other University organizations are making this an occasion to give a theatre

Workizers Win Cup From Pershings in Competitive Drill

After brigade parade before the governor and Chancellor Avery, Workizer Rifles won the cup annually contested for with Pershing Rifles yesterday afternoon. Neither company was in the pink of condition and the competition was not as fast as last year when the Pershings were the victors.

Co-eds by crowds thronged the field and the grandstand was a gay sight with spring suits and gaily decked hats. From the farm there were a large number of rooters fair and otherwise and these cheered their company at every move. The Pershings were not without their supporters and the field sounded like a football field at many stages of the affair.

This is the second brigade parade since the Spanish-American war, the first being held last spring at the farm. Great interest was expressed in the parade about the campus Monday.

WILL TAKE SPRING FIELD TRIP.

A party of six seniors and graduate foresters expect to leave in a few days for Missouri where they will spend about three weeks study forest conditions and methods of lumbering. One or two botanists may accompany them. They will be the guests of Capt. J. B. White, who extended the Conservation Congress in Lincoln recently, and will probably stay at one of his lumber camps in the Ozarks. Besides studying the conditions of the region, some of the men will collect data for the preparation of theses. This trip will take the place of the usual biennial trip to the Wisconsin woods which had to be given up this year because a large enough party could not be made up. Prof. Morrill will leave Wednesday to look over the ground.

TODAY IS ARBOR DAY

EX-GOVERNOR J. STERLING MORTON'S IDEA COMMEMORATED BY TREE-LOVERS ALL OVER.

FORESTRY CLUB CELEBRATES

Annual Occasion Set by the Governor Since 1872—Many Will Plant Trees in Appropriate Spots.

Today has been set aside by the governor as Arbor day, the official tree planting day for the State of Nebraska. The idea of Arbor day originated with Hon. J. Sterling Morton of Nebraska City, upon whose resolution the Nebraska State Board of Agriculture set aside April 10, 1872 as the first Arbor day. Since then the custom has spread till now practically every state in the Union has an Arbor day. The day can not fall on the same date in all states because the differences in climate require an earlier date in the south and a later one in the north than we have here in order to obtain the best results from tree planting. Since Mr. Morton's suggestion was made a number of other countries, including Canada, England, Sweden, Spain, and Australia, have adopted the Arbor day idea.

The custom is not a new one, for history shows that tree planting days or times were prescribed in the olden times in other countries. Even in the middle ages in parts of Germany tree planting was felt to be necessary, and in certain districts such customs sprang up as the planting of a certain number of trees yearly by each man or the planting of a tree by each member of the family, the replacement of every tree cut, and the planting of trees by each newly married couple. The ancient Aztecs are said to have planted a tree every time a child was born, and the old Mexican Indians plant trees on certain days when the moon is full, and name them after their children.

Not many students of the University can be expected to plant trees today. We can all remember, however, the Arbor days of the past, which usually meant to us a half holiday, a tree planting by class or school, a patriotic address, and a "program" of recitations and songs. Especially in the south where Arbor day in a number of states falls on Washington's birthday, patriotism is effectively combined with the Arbor day ceremony, and the educational benefit, especially in regard to the beauty utility and growing value of trees and forests, to the great numbers of young people who take part, cannot be over estimated. Careful
