BETWEEN WHILES.

With this issue the ~~Nebraskan ceases~~ publication until the first of next week. Commencing Tuesday, then, the paper will be issued five times each week, excepting holidays, until Commencement week. In other words, the grind is on. And in the meantime, until Tuesday, are the three last days of summer vacation, that time when, no matter how hard you may be working at something else, it is a pleasure not to have to think of studies. Therefore, we urge you to make the most of these remaining days. The staff is taking its last beauty nap for some time to come.

RUSHING?

Yes, rushing!

So say the men with a wry smile and a sorrowful glance at the crowd surrounding that promising "infans."

So say the girls, but in a spiteful, sarcastic way which bodes ill for something or other, some time.

The fraternity-sorority rushing problem presents extraordinary complications this fall, owing to the failure of the second-semester pledging plan to make good, in the case of the sororities. The fraternities have therefore dropped the proposition and gone back to the old style, "catch as catch can, no holds barred"; it scarcely needs editorial comment to point out the ensuing complications. Official rushing starts Tuesday, and in the meantime—we should worry.

The co-eds see little humor in the situation. To them this proposition of passing up their old friends, just because they happen to be freshmen, is akin to tragedy—in some cases. And it is further augmented, this dissatisfied feeling, by the gleeful way in which the fraternities are casting around. It is scarcely characteristic of Nebraska co-eds to sit quietly by and await developments. Just why, they argue, should the rules be made to benefit the men, while the girls are held down by strict injunctions limiting every phase of rushing?

Both fraternities and sororities are trying to work out a practical scheme of rushing. It is a laboratory experiment of no small size, which is being approached from different premises by the men and the women. In the meantime, this suspense is nerve-racking.

"THE AWGWAN."

The "Awwgan" is most assuredly a university magazine with a purpose. It enters into a distinct field of university talent, and should have the support of students who are alive. Until the last semester Nebraska students who felt that peculiar "writer's itch," but who found no outlet for their ideas in existing publications, were forced to suffer in silence or go elsewhere. In the columns of the Awwgan is space for literary lapses, take-offs, cartoons, original (with emphasis) jokes, and artistic advertising. The student who can observe the everyday traits and fallings of Nebraska life, who has the ability to write up these observations in an original manner, and who still does not make an effort to "break into print," is hurting the school and its institutions, and moreover he (or she) is hurting himself. Think it over.

BIG TIME AT OPEN HOUSE

the other subject nearest his heart, football. He emphasized the necessity of getting out, the hard knocks taken in assimilating the elements of the game as a freshman, and lastly, the stick-to-it-iveness that characterizes the real football player.

Quantities of eats were provided in the Temple cafeteria, and every one left with a feeling of satisfaction both with the entertainment of the evening and the school spirit manifested by the new students.
