SENDS OUT MANY QUESTIONS

Committee to Investigate Student Council Plans to Get Their Information From Surrounding Schools.

The student council committee met last evening in Guy Reed's office, to devise means of obtaining information relevant to student government in other schools. The committee decided to send out a questionnaire regarding the matter to an hundred and fifty of the larger schools of the country. The queries sent out will cover the organization, management, powers, faults and benefits attendant upon a student council. With this information in hand a broad statement of the success or failure of the plan in other universities can be prepared.

From this an organization which will meet the peculiar needs of Nebraska is to be planned. When this has been accomplished the final approval or rejection of the plan will be submitted to a vote of the student body.

At present questions of general student concern fall naturally into the hands of the faculty for there is no student body with power to act. Members of the faculty give assurance that faculty control is not desired if the students can effect their own system. Student councils in one form or other are common in the western universities in particular. Where this is true the constitution of the student organization provides for the regulation of all student activities.

At Nebraska there has been an agitation of some form or other for such a student governing body for several years. If a constitution can be drawn up which will give the council just enough power, make it a truly representative body and make it efficient, there is no doubt but that it will fill a long felt want.

As the students are vitally interested in this move, the committee will welcome and suggestions concerning it from the student body.

STUDENT INSURANCE IN SCHOOLS OF GERMANY

Student insurance is a feature of German continuation schools. For an insurance fee of 19 cents per half year, the students in the schools for builders, for example, are insured against all accidents that may happen to them in the school room or on the way to and from school.

WILL CELEBRATE ANNIVERSARY

himself appreciated by students and citizens alike. He did much to further the work of the school among the students, and much to better the conditions and advantages of the college itself. During the eight years of his administration, the space at the campus devoted to study was almost doubled the State farm was re-created, appropriations were doubled, and the university was widely advertised both for the quality of its work and the character of its professors and teaching force.

During the period from 1900 to 1908, the university made great strides materially. The Administration building, Brace hall, The Museum and the Temple were completed and work was inaugurated on the Engineering building. In the same time practically all the buildings of any permanent value on the State Farm were erected. More than to any other one man credit is given to Mr. Andrews for the growth and success of the State Farm. Although an Eastern man of extreme culture, he realized that Nebraska was an Agricultural state and foresaw that the state must educate its young men in the methods of scientific Agriculture. He went about the matter with his characteristic energy and the result was the creation of the State farm almost as it is in its present form.

Chancellor Andrews was also particularly active in enlarging the opportunities for study and succeeded in installing many new department of education. The College of Medicine, the Teacher's College, and the School of Pharmacy were all started during his administration and chiefly at his insistence. It was Dr. Andrews who picked Dean Roscoe Pound for the head of the Law school, which selection resulted in the creation of a systematic Law department.

The Scholar Above All.

Chancellor Emeritus Andrews is a typical scholar of the old school. He is unusually well versed in the classics, while one may get an idea of the range of his learning from the various professional chairs which he occupied at different times. He has been professor of history, of political economy, of finance, of moral philosophy and of homeletics. He can address a political meeting, an association of Agriculturists, or a gathering of historians.

Since his last illness and consequent poor health he has been forced to remain in the South for the greater part of the year, where he spends his time quietly, writing occasional essays and reviews for the magazines. One of the most recent, "Education Thru Reading" was published in the Popular Science Monthly and attracted wide editorial comment.
