CRAMMING TAKES PLACE OF FUSSING LAST SUNDAY

in Anxious Hours at Work.

Sunday, the last day of rest before the finals, was spent in a way very different from usual. It was not, how ever, passed in rest and meditation nor in visiting at the "open" houses, but in mental labor severe and long. Everywhere students were seen hurrying along with notebooks under their arms. They were going to confer with other stuents, to compare botany notes and contemporary history notes, to finish the last home economics paper and the rhetoric 7 themes, and to cram generally for the approaching finals.

Law students everywhere were going toward the campus with stacks of heavy volumes. The city library was crowded with students making a final brave effort to finish the "Pol-Econ" paper and to learn some German.

Without a doubt more studying was done on Sunday than has been done any one day all semester. But the good work did not terminate Sundayit will continue all week and will not begin to let up in the least until Friday noon, when finals are taken and students registered.
