

I had more than one invitation from my friend Smith to spend a week or two with him at his castle of Hoenzugwaldergrabenstein, and so at last I journeyed across the North Sea to haven't been on a horse for some find out how the son of the American years. find out how the son of the American "Oh, you'll take to it all right," said smith confidently. "Riding on horse-back is the only method of progression ber baron.

Smith wrote me that his castle stood about six miles from the Rhine, but was not visible from that celebrated river. He told me at which spot to leave the steamer, and said that if would be at the laiding to meet me, as otherwise I might have some diffi-culty in finding Heenzugus dergrabenstein. I thought by this that Smith was hedging, and that his boasted castle would be a very small affair, otherwise the guide-book must have had something to say about it.

On inquiring. I fourd that the boat stopped in mid-stream, and that I would have to be taken off in a small boat. As we approached the place, the captain said to me-for his eyes were sharper than mire, and be could see distinctly objects ahead on the shore which were practically invisible

There's that mad American and

"In what does his madness consist?' I asked, for I suspected he was referring to my Grend Smith.

"(th, he is tremendously rich," he said, "and has bought a nastle some in the back country. He dresses his retainers, as he calls them, in a style of the fourteenth century and he wants to revive the old fendal system in Germany. They say he ex-pects to establish his right as a rob-ber baron to come down to the Rhine and stop any boat that passes. looting Its contents if it so pleases him. I Imagine he will have the Emperor William down upon him before he knows where he is, and then he will wish he were somewhere else; for the emperor is not a man to be triffed with, and allows no nan to swagger around Germany except himself." Saying which the captain bowed low, as every official 's bound to do on the mention of the emperor's name Have you ever met the madman?

Hush-sh-sh!" whispered the captain. "You must not allude to the alluding to the owner of Hoenzugwal-

"Oh, no," answered the captain, who was a very serious man. "The trouble with him is that he is merely crezy, that's all."

By this time the was jeking with you?" at different periods. I mentioned this to Smith and he said my suppostion was partly correct.
"My ancestors," he remarked, "made things limb."

. Mounted Into the Empty Saddle. ue to us, and swung alongside. Into waved his hand from his lofty posi-tion on the bridge, the steamer pre-horses. Smith and I, having dis-ceeded up the Rhine, my two rowers ed, walked into the great castle. laid their backs to the work and headed the boat for the shore. I saw that Smith had not come down to the landing with a vehicle for me, as I and expected, but recognized him scated aland a squad of about a dozen men, of logs, also on horseback, and I thought each Dinner man had a fishing rod, but I found, on rived. Smith took the head of the tacoming closer, that the rods were long, thin lances, which, with their

Mis Castile. Br Zune Sharp.

whatever they call it, with an ancient German cloth cap, somewhat like a Tam-o'-Shanter, set jauntily on his head. I must say that I never saw Smith looking better or more staiwart than when he sat easily on his black horse, with his knuckles pressed against his hip, waiting for me. He greeted me with the utmost or rdiality, and I must confess it was with some hesitation and not a few misgivings that I mounted the empty saddle waiting for n.e.

"I am not sure," I said to Smith, "that I shall shine as an equestrian. I for a gentleman. I assure you the world has degenerated since carriages, coaches and railway trains were invented, not to mention steamboats and other modern abominations.

We turned our horses' heads toward a valley that opened out on the Rhine. I would let him know on what day The road was winding but good. The and on viat boat I would arrive he horsemen behind us wheeled through several evolutions and formed into little companies of three men each, the whole squad a few horses' lengths to the rear.

For some time, until I became accustomed to my mount, my attention was fuly occpied with keeping my seat, and conversation was difficult but as I gained some confidence I said to Smith: "Who are these chaps with the hop poles that are following us?"

"Hop poles!" cried my host with indignation in his voice. "Those are lances. Each lanre is over three hundred years old, and I got them out of the cellars of my castle. I venture to emperor in that way." the cellars of my castle. I venture to "My dear captain." I said, "I was say that no modern weapon would have lasted half that time, for they are as

"Ah. quite so," answered the captain, evidently much relieved. "Yes, he has been on my boat a number of times, and only the other day he asked me what I would do if I ran the rose of my boat agreement a characteristic or they are as sound as ever they were."

The road led up through a beautiful valley. On either hillside vines grew nearly to the top. Although the road the rose of my boat agreement a characteristic or they are as sound as ever they were." the nose of my boat against a chain did not get a view of the castle until stretched across the Rhine. I told we had trotted something like three him I would go back to the next town miles. Then Smith pointed it out to and send on the police."

"Then,' the young man replied, 'I of it round a corner. It stood to the shall probably be compelled to go to the expense of two chains, one of manding it, and I was amazed to see which will be sunk in the river until its size and perfect state of preservathe steamboat passes over it; then we take the steamboat passes over it; then we take the can pull it taut, so we can have the panile, rose from one corner, and at the other was a stouter round tower, as he said this, and he added: "That as he said this, and he added: "That is fire trouble with nedern inventions. Steam gives you the power of turning around and colag back, which the men in the olden days could not have dore."

"Don't you think," I said to the captain, "that he was jcking with you?"

"Oh no" answered the captain who

By this time the captain's attention in this district. The castle was burned was taken up with slowing and stopping the steamer. A small boat manned by two rowers threw a line of Mayence, and the justly incensed populace of the neighborhood used to rise in their might every now and then and massacre every member of the family who had not taken to the woods. But they never succeeded in completely annihilating my ancestors; always one rebuilt the stronghold, generally trying to make it more secure than it had been before. This gives a variegated effect to the edifice that strikes me as wonderfully picturesque." a by-road left the main thoroughfare and took directly to the bills. The main road went on up the valley, while the by-road zig-zagged up through the castle, looming greater and greater above us, until we came at last to an arched gateway in the stone wall, guarded by two men with lances in their hands. Riding under the stone arch we came into a large courtyard somewhat roughly paved, and here attendants sprang forward to take our horses. Smith and I, having dismount-

Smith led me into a large room which was evidently the dining hall of the eastle. At one end was a large fire-place, constructed on such a gigantic scule that it formed practically a room charger, while standing at benches beneath its ample canopy, and little distance behind him at the back there burned a great fire

Dinner was served as soon as we arble and motioned me to a place at his right hand. The table was a plain onk butts resting upon the ground, stood up with their points several feet above the heads of the men on horse-back f.Standing near Smith was a saddled horse, somewhat similar to his own, which was held by a semewhat fantastically-decased page, and, still further along, was a donkey with panniers, evhiently intended it carry the luggage. Smith his self was clad nter was a cowled monk who took the stool at Smith's left. He pronounced a benediction on the repast and then every one fell to. The meal was plenbut rough, and consisted of a huge baron of beef with mashed potatoes. I waited for a plate to be handed to me, and did not understand until Smith called my attention to the fact, that the square piece of plank on the table in front of me was my trencher from which I was to eat. He very kindly showed me how I was to build an embankment on this with the mashed potatoes and receive the beef and gravy in the center. It required some care not to eat too ravenously of this embankment, otherwise a breach was made in the walls and a tide of gravy flooded forth which was difficult to stem unless a man were prompt and Money to Depest Otto Ferdinand Llonel DeCuyper, a bronzed, blistered and odoriferous knight of the tomato can, was up before Judge Morrison this morning on i the charge of vagrancy. The gent with the aristocratic name was gathered in last evening while enjoying a can of stale beer and a rest from his weary pilgrimage. After wringing the superfluous extract of hops out of his clay-colored Vandykes he fell in line with the ceps and accompanied the cops to Mr. Sully's sanitarium. He exhibited a nonchalant ease in police court this morning that would have graced the Prince of Wales at his best, After the judge had fined him $5 and costs DeCuyper said:

TALE OF AN ARISTOCRATIC TRAMP Slept in Astor's Bed and Lonned

"It's jus' dis way, judge. I ain't always been a hittin' de road. At one tine I was jus as big a mug as Chaun Delew, or Willie Astor, or Billy Vancerbilt or any of dem swell guys dat have got money enough now to burn a wet dog. Chauncey Devew an' me used to go to school together, an when he wuz a young feller I lent him $5 once. Of course, dey don't know n'e now. It was me dat slept in Astor's bed in New York an' got run in. I tell ye, judge, I've got blue blood in dese yere veins o' mine, and I fee right at home among millionaires apristocrats, dough I never had much of a chance to make money. I've been wait n' around now for thirty years for my ship to come in, an' I guess she's run into a reef. What knocked me out, judge, was love. I once was switten with a maiden fair, but feared dat she loved me for my prospects of future greatness, so I trun her over-board. De girl died of a broken heart, and I've been a wanderer ever since. Some places I work de healer racket, and, besides laying my hands on sick people. I also try de same thing on any grub that's layin' around loose. If I could get to Freeport now, dat's what I would like to do. I know a feller dare dat works in a brewery. All right, judge, I'll go, dough I ain't bughouse, if you do say so."

And Otto Ferdinand Lionel DeCuyper was led out into the wide world by a stern copper and given a drinkof water-and a tle pass to Freeport .-Rockford Republican.

TESTS OF ENDURANCE FOR LOV. slowly:

Methods in Vogue in Africa of Try. ing Man's Fitness for Marriage.

No other country offers such opportunities to those desiring to marry as America. In that respect it is truly the home of the free and the land of the brave, not to say the foolhardy. In some countries those matrimonially inclined have to get the parents' consent, in others the prospective bridegroom has to show that he can support a wife. Uncle Sam throws no such obstacles in the path of true love. He recognizes every man's right to starve a woman if she is willing, and provided one can raise the slight fee necessary for the license, there is nothing to hinder him getting married if he can find a woman of the same mind. In South Africa the savage tribes have a peculiar ceremony which they put the matrimonial candidate through previous to his entering the holy estate. His hands are tied up in a bag containing fire ants for two hours. If he bears unmoved the torture of their stings he is considered qualified to cope with the nagging and daily jar and fret of married life. Such a man would make an admirable husband. He would not be upset by the thoughts of a spring bonnet, or grow irritable every time the steak was overdone. The idea of having a patience trial for these about to marry is a good idea that civilized people might adopt .-

A Knitting Bag

To make a useful knitting bag, twist or two escaped, and they returned and two rounds of zinc wire; a small one for the bottom of the bag and a much larger one for the top or shoulder. Stretch some effective colored silkeither striped or brocaded-from one We presently came to a spot where ring to the other, allowing for the bag to be about ten by twelve inches in length; sew securely to the wire rings, and here add frills of silk in a conforest. Sometimes at the elbows of trasting shade. The lower frill is this road we caught glimpses of the merely required to ornament the bag, castle, booming greater and greater and should be a couple of inches wide finished with a twist of ribbon and a big bow to hide the joints. The upper frill is much more important as it fastions the actual mouth of the bag, and should be allowed quite six inches Fix one edge to the large ring. and about two and one-half inches from this insert a recying string of brightly colored ribbon, which shall act as a draw-thread for opening and closing the reticule. The rest of the frill will stand up and form a dulnty finish, while I would suggest that this frill be lined throughout with some delicate color. Yellow with white lin ing, green with pink lining and helio-trope with lemen-colored lining, are each and all dainty and effective, while the material used for such bags may ise of any of the art colored brocades new so fashlonable. Hags of the same shape, but on a larger scale, could be used for work sachets, or again, small opera bags to match the weater's gown. made in this style, would be effective

> "Uncle Tom, what is executive abile. It's knowing how to make other recple work without doing anything your-self."-Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A BOY'S GRIM PATENT.

The close of the great war between the North and South made it necessary for certain bands of lawless men to withdraw into the mountains.

At the darkest part of that short but memorable period of doubt, terror and suspense, a stranger came to the home of Wenby Dilbert, which was deep-set in the wildest part of Northern Georgia. It is not quite accurate to say that the man came, for he was carried, in an unconscious state, by Wenby Dilbert and his son, Hank, from where Hank found him, pale, still and bloody, beside a spring in the wood a quarter of a mile from the house. He was sorely wounded through the left shoulder, where a bullet hit him, and he had fainted from loss of blood.

The Dilbert family consisted of Wenby, his wife and their only somewhat sickly son, Hank. They were poor but honest mountain folk, and they lived in a comfortable cabin, remote from other houses. They were frugal, and during the war had hoarded up the sil-ver and gold and "Yankee" money that they could get, so that now Mr. Dil-bert had hidden under a rude hearthstone a squirref-skin bag containing $485 in coin and paper money. This financial fact was kept as closely as possible, a secret of secrets; for the mountain outlaws would murder the whole family to handle a quarter of that amount.

With tenderest care the Dilberts

Hank as Nurse norsed the unknown man; but it was not without misgivings; he was so hairy, so rough of feature, so power-fully built and so gri min the expression of his countenance. Moreover, when he regained consciousness, his silence and mysterious actions generally wrought upon the imagination of his benefactors. It was plain to see that he was no common man. A certain magnetic force, a ray from with-in, struck like keen lightning from his narrow, deep-set gray eyes.

Hank Dilbert, aged sixteen .did most of the nursing. One day his patient suddenly sat up in bed and asked for ham and eggs. Hank called his mother. She came; but she utrned paie, for the man's fierceness, invalid as he was, frightened her, but she said, "They ain't no aigs," she said. The man's gray eyes glinted between the closed lids.

"No aigs!" he growled. "What's yer hens been er doin'?" "Ner they ain't no ham, nother." Mrs. Dilbert went on. "Yer have ter take sidemeat an' taters." "No ham! W'at'd ye eat it all up fer, w'en ye knowed 'at I'd want some?" He smiled at her in a way that made her blood clog her heart. "Well, hustle an' git me w'at ye have got, fer I'm

After he had eaten heartily, the man called for his clothes and dressed himself. Meantime, night fell with a drizzling rain and a chill, blustering wind. It was pitch dark in the deep little mountain valley. Hank made a pine-knot fire on the hearth in the man's room. The big fellow filled a squeezing himself into the opening so made, said: "Kiver me, quick -lay them boards ver me!"

Hank obeyed, and just as he had completed his task there came a knock at the outer door that burst it open, and then Hank heard his mother

"Shet erp, quick," a stern voice com-manded, "an' jes' git the ole man's money fer us in a hurry."

"Don't ye squeak another time. Ef ye do I'll shoot ye full o' holes. Git that money, an' git it quick."

Hank was a mere boy; but he had in him the spirit of ancestors who were Revolutionary soldiers and Indian fighters. Hearing his mother threatened sent along his nerves the thrill of true heroism. Quick as a steel spring he leaped to the partition door and flung it open. In his right hand he held a pair of heavy iron tongs, which he swung furiously against the first man he saw. The man's back was to-ward Hank, and the blow was a lucky one, landing hard on the side of the fellow's head. He staggered and reeled against the wall, clutched at the logs and fell beavily.

At the same instant another of the men-there were three, all maskedstruck Hank with a pistol, a blow which would have killed him, but for the tongs. The barrel of the weapon hit one prong of the tongs, and so was somewhat parried.

Mrs. Dilbert was now screaming at the top of her voice and struggling with the third robber.—Up from the floor rose the one that Hank had knocked down.

"Yer a goin' ter die awful quick," he gnashed forth, flourishing a large knife and lunging madly at the boy, who just then was dodging and leaping this way and that, to save his head from his first assailant's blow.

The outside door was open, and the wind and rain came in. The ashes were whirled from the wide fireplace and filled the room; the lard lamp on Mrs. Dilbert's little table was blown The one light was a wavering flare from the pine knots on the hearth in the other room.

"Murder! Help!" Hank cried, as loud as he could.

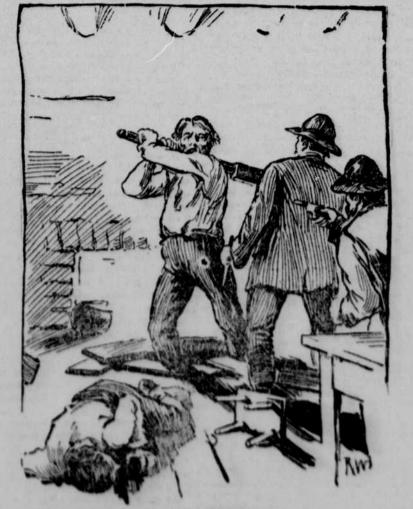

Suddenly the cabin trembled. There was a rending noise. The floor in the other room was heaved high and the boards fell aside with a mighty clater. A pale giant loomed in the uncertain light, his hair disheveled, his grim face distorted with passion. A post was wrenched from the bedstead and some heavy blows fell right and left. Two or three pistol shots rang spite-fully in the midst of the struggle. Next morning at 1 0o'clock Col. Mill er Wofford arrived at the lonely Dilbert cabin. Five picked men of the revenue service were with him, and they were guided by Mr. Dilbert, whose description of the wounded stranger at his house had satisfied the colonel that it was Glen Hires, the most terrible of all the mountain outlaws, who had been nursed so tenderly by Hank. There was a large re ward for his capture, dead or alive, but recently he had escaped, badly wounded, by fighting his way through a posse of Federal officers.

They came only to rescue Hank, Mrs. Dilbert had been shot in the attack on the house, but her death had been avenged. Within and without the cabin lay the bodies of the outlaws. Glen Hires, whose giant strength had felled them, one by one, was slowly bleeding to death on the cabin floor. On the bed, unconscious, lay poor Hank, and the last words of the man he had nursed were:

"The youngster won't die, will he? Glen Hires never heard the answer; but his wish was granted. Hank lived through it, and to-day is a leading man near the Tennessee line in North Georgia.-Philadelphia Inquirer.

Satisfied With the Security. The other day a little girl was seen by one of the clerks standing outside pipe and, sprawling himself on the the Bank of England. Hoor, his head resting on one hand. When he asked her a smoked in stlence. Hank crept into a she asked to be shown corner of the room and sat eyeing him

"Hit her kinder comf'table," growled the man, after awhile, "jes ter be in outen the rain." As he spoke he raised himself on his elbow in the attitude of listening. Hank listened, too, for his ear caught the distinct tramp of a horse-no,

When he asked her what she wanted she asked to be shown round the bank The clerk was surprised at this, so he went to the manager and told him. The manager came and showed her

After she had examined all the locks upboards, safes, etc., the manager in troduced her to all the gentlemen in

When she was going out she said to

"Can it be pop came back?" he hewith a manager:
"I thank you very ough for letting me see round your bank, because my papa put aixpence in his account for me and I wanted to see if it was safe."

Spare Moments.

Educate Your Daughters. sprang up, tore is first one board and then another from the cabin floor, and, At this season of the year parents have to decide upon and select the educational institution which their daughters are to attend for the coming years. In this connection we desire to call attention to the educational announcement in our advertising columns of the Academy of the Sacred Heart, St. Joseph, Mo. Their buildings and grounds are attractive, locality healthful, teaching in all branches thorough, and terms reasonable. Parents fortunate to select this school for the education and training of their daughters will, we are sure, be fully satisfied. Terms per session of five months: Payable in advance, $115; this includes tuition, boarding, washing, courses in French, German or Latin, use of library and physician's fee. Next session will open Sept. 1st, 1895. For further information address Mother Superior, Academy of the Sa-cred Heart, St. Joseph, Mo.

"Henry," said Mr. Meekton's wife, who had been overcoming his objections to some household expenses,

"You ought to go into politics."
"I'm sure you never gave me any credit for ability in that line before." "No, but I think now that you have some of the right qualities. I never saw anybody more reluctant to talk about money than you are."—Washington Star.

Roof gardens are a great boon to the men who can't leave town.

Among the "best people" are those who mind their own business.

Naturally, have a good appetite, keep your blood pure and your nerves strong by taking

Hood's

Sarsaparilla
The best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

Hood's Pills cure billousness, headache. 256.

Seaside and Country Gowns need Duxbak 8 BIAS VELVETEEN BINDING

on their skirt edges. It is rainproof, sheds water and never turns grey.

If your dealer will not supply you we will.

Samples showing labels and materials mailed free. "Home Dressmaking Made Easy," a new book by Miss Emma M. Hooper, of the Ladies' Home Journal, sent for 25c., postage paid. S. H. & M. Co., P. O. Box 699, N. Y. City.

Don't take substitutes to save a few pennies. It won't pay you. Always insist on HIRES Rootbeer.

Made only by The Charles E. Hires Co., Philadelphia.

The cost? Only a trifle more than at your own home.

$5 a week for good accommodations-$10 for better-$20 for the bestat Hot Springs, South Dakota.

Book about Hot Springs free if you write-to J. Francis, Gen'l Pass'r Agent, Burlington Route, Omaha, Neb.

ACADEMY OF THE SACRED HEART ST. JOSEPH. MO.

Sr. JOSEPH. MO.

The course of instruction in this academy, conducted by the Religious of the Sarved Heart, embraces the whole range of subjects necessary to constitute a solid and retined education. Propriety of deportment, personal neatness and the principles of morality are objects of unceasing attention. Extensive grounds after the pupils every facility for useful bodily exercise; their health is an object of constant solicitude, and in sickness they are attended with maternal care. Fall term open Tuesday, Sept. 1. Terms for session of 5 months, pay able in advance, $115, this includes utition, board, washing, courses in French, German or Latin, use of literary and physician's fee. For further particulars address.

THE SUPERIOR.

Academy Sacred Heart.

51. Joseph, Mo.

TOS ROWALL COLOR Manufacture Co.

THE ROWALL COLOR Manufacture Co.

THE West Elevents birest, Havea, C.

STEADY WE PAY CASH WEEK! Y and want men everywhere to SELL. WORK "absolutely best "Superboutfits now system. STAIK BROTHERS, LOVERLAND, BOCKFORT, ILL.

PENSION With W. Houses

LINDSEY+OMAHA+RUBBERS!

W. N. U., OMAHA-29-1896

When writing to advertisers, kindly mention this paper.