Marrying on $50 a Month.

Yesterday a young man asked me if it would be safe for him to marry on $500 and a salary of $50 per month. I told him I could tell better when I saw the girl. There are girls who have grown up in ease and who have kicked great black and blue welts in the lap of luxury, yet who are more ready and willing to accept a little rough weather than the poor girl who has stood for eighteen years looking out through the soiled window of life waiting for the rain to rinse it off and let the sunlight through that she might see her approaching lord.-Bill Nye.

How Old are You?

You need not answer the question, madam, for in your case age is not counted by years. It will always be true that "a woman is as old as she looks." Nothing sets the seal of age so deeply upon woman's beauty as gray hair. It is natural, therefore, that every woman is anxious to preserve her hair in all its original abundance and beauty; or, that being denied the crowning gift of beautiful hair, she longs to possess it. Nothing is easier than to attain to this gift or to preserve it, if already possessed. Ayer's Hair Vigor restores gray or faded hair to its original color. It does this by simply aiding nature, by supplying the nutrition necessary to health and growth. There is no better preparation for the hair

ORPHAN AN

(By Amy Randolph.) R. FOLLIOTT had Grace. just finished his dinner.

Mr. Folliott was a very rich man, and his cook had once been a pupil of the great Soyer, so that the meal, although unostentatious in every respect, was of the best and choicest. The asparagus soup, a delicate young baked shad, roast ham with champagne, sauce, a salad, coffee, sweets-all these things Mr. Folliott enjoyed because, in their way, they were perfect. And he was just culling out a few monster strawberries from among their green leaves when a footstep sounded on the veranda.

He looked quickly up. A tall child of 13 stood there, her face flushed, her hair disheveled and her thick boots powdered over with the fine dust of the roads.

"I am so hungry," burst involuntarfly from her lips, "Can't I have one of those cakes?

Mr. Folliott frowned and shook his head. "If you are a beggar," he said, "you had better go around to the back door. Mrs. Hanford will give you something, I dare say.'

The child blushed deeply and drew herself up with something of unconscious dignity.

"I'm not a baggar," she said. "Can't a girl be hungry without being a beggar? I have come here to look for Paul Folliott."

"That's my name," said the old gentleman, a little suspiciously.

"Then," she said, composedly, have come here to be your little girl. I am Gracie Bellaire. My papa was Colonel Bruce Bellaire, and when he died he said that you would take care of me. Here are his letters. And, now, please, let them give me something to

And this was the way in which Grace Bellaire came to the house of her father's distant kinsman, Paul Folliott.

She was a pretty child, when the dust was washed out of her dimples and the shining brown curls were brushed into something like shape. She had Bruce Bellaire's large, dreamy eyes and exquisite Greek profile, and Mr. Folliott, even while he experienced a thrill of consternation at this new charge, felt his heart warm toward her.

"My dear," said he, "you are a nice little girl, but what can I do with you?" "I could stay here and play, couldn't I?" said Gracie, innocently.

"But there is something else in the world for little girls to do besides playing," said Mr. Folliott-and so he took counsel with good Mrs. Hanford, his housekeeper.

"Dear heart, sir," said that kindly personage, "it seems to me plain enough. Why don't you send her to Mrs. John Folliott? Don't you remember last summer, when she was here and you helped her out with the debts At last a place has been found where the poor bicyclist is protected. It is in the town of Chicopee, Mass., and any person found throwing into the street is there in all the world that could bring Miss Gracie up better than she?"

"Mrs. Hanford, you are a genius" said Mr. Folliott. "Why on earth Mrs. John Folliott came to the Grange at once-a portly, smiling mature of your papa!" So Mrs. John Folliott, greatly rejoicing, returned to the brown-stone house in New York, whose rent was unpaid, and to the daughters, whose expensive dresses were yet written up on the wrong side of Mile. Surlitor's books.

"It's positively providential," said Mrs. Folliott. "A thousand dollars a year clearly added to our income!"

"But there is that great awkward child to bring up," said Madalena Folliott, a handsome brunette, who had just made her debut in society.

"Oh, that does not signify," said the serene matron. "Her cost will be absolutely nothing."

And so, in the course of a few weeks. Gracie Bellaire found herself settling down to the position of lady's maid to the three Misses Folliott. She sewed the buttons on Madalena's boots, she ran out on rainy days, when the very chambermaid objected on account of the weather, to match shades of worsted and filoselle for Alicette, the second daughter; she washed Florence's poodie for her, and wept many a tear of bitter mortification the while. And by degrees her shoes grew worn and rusty, her healthy young growth outstripped the limits of her coarse serge gowns, her bonnet and mantle became so shabby that she could not go out except under cover of the friendly dusk. Once, driven to desperation, she wore Florence's white chapeau and soft seal jacket. But she never re- 2 o'clock in the morning, there was no peated the experiment, for Mrs. Folhot: met her on the stairs and flashed | indy's 'maid to them. nothing so sinful as vanity." "But when I go to school-" began

"You are not going to school," said Mrs. Folliott. "It is your business to stay here and help Jane with the china and silver and make yourself useful. You are not a young lady, like Miss Alicette and Miss Florence-you are only a working girl."

Child though she was, Gracle Bellaire comprehended the injustice of all this. Kind old Mr. Folliott hadn't meant this when he gave her over into Mrs. John Folliott's change. He must have forgotten to send the money, Grace thought, or she never would have been treated thus.

"It's a shame," said honest Bridget, the cook. "The child ought to have exercise at least."

"Sure, if she was the cat they couldn't take less notice of her," said | 500,600 inhabitants. Norah, the waitress. "And just look at the clothes of her,"

said Fannie, the smart chambermaid. "She's kept me awake with her cough for two nights," said Bridget, and all the paregoric I give her don't leose it up a bit."

For Mrs. Folliott, under an extra or two, and when the company was les. gone nothing had been said about her resuming her little room again.

"The girls need it to keep their summer dresses in," said Mrs. Folliott. "And Grace is just as well off with Bridget."

"They wouldn't care if she coughed herself out of the world entirely," said Norah.

"Worse luck to 'em." said Fannie. "But nobody ever yet ground down the orphan and the fatherless without there was a judgment on 'em for it." Mr. Folliott all this time was beginning to be a little uneasy. His elegant city relative wrote at stated intervals, but her communications were eminently unsatisfactory. "I should like to see the child," he said within himself. "And last night I dreamed that Bruce Bellaire came to me, just as he used to look, and asked me what I had done with his one ewe lamb. I don't believe in supernatural warnings. I never had any faith in signs and omens. But I believe I will go down to New York and see if Gracie is well." And so, late one snowy December night, there came a tremendous peal at the doorbell of Mrs. John Folliott's mansion. That lady was absent at a fashionable reception with her three daughters. Norah and Fannie had gone t) visit a friend in a neighboring kitchen, and Bridget, half asleep, stumbled to the front door and opened

"Miss Grace, is it?" she stammered. "Sure, if yez'll step in the parlay I'll send her up to you."

"Up!" repeated the keen old gentle-

"OH! TAKE ME AWAY!"

"In the kitchen, sir," confessed Bridget.

"I will go where she is," said Mr. Folliott. "Take me to her at once." Poor little Gracie sat before the kitchen fire, the meekest and palest of | think we have caught a very pleasant Cinderellas, in an unconsciously drocping attitude. Her dress was worn and faded, her hair brushed back in a plain plait, her cheek transparently pale, and there was an expression in her eyes, as they looked into the red embers, that made Mr. Folliott's heart ache. "I've not come any too soon," thought, and 'hen he said aloud: "Gracie! Little Gracie!"

With a sudden cry she sprang to her feet and ran sobbing into his arms. "Oh, take me away!" she exclaimed.

'Oh, I am so miserable here!" The old man looked at her, with tears in his eyes.

"I have made a mistake, Gracie," said he. "No man can do his duty by proxy. I should have kept you myself. Never mind, little one, henceforward you shall be all my own."

He turned to Bridget. "Puck her clothes," said he, "and lose no time." Bridget stared. "Are you going to take her away, sir?" said she. Mr. Folliott nodded "And it's glad of it I am." said the honest girl, "for though it's weariful lenesome I shall be without her, it's no place for a gentleman's daughter, la Teddie's Advice.

The Blakes have a summer home in Willoughby, to which they have just returned, after a residence of six months in the city. One of the first callers after the family had got settled was the minister. While the good man was inquiring after the health of each member of the family, expressing his pleasure at their return and explaining how the affairs of the church were going, little Teddie, who celebrated his third birthday, and who, during their stay in the city, must have met somebody who was addicted to the use of slang, stood open-mouthed and apparently drinking in every word that was said. Having finished a general review of affairs concerning his church the minister started to tell about a book suddenly interrupted him by gravely saying:

"Oh, go hire a hall!" It is understood that even now the worthy minister is sometimes possessed of troublesome doubts concerning the Blakes.-Cleveland Leader.
