The Value of Thrift

Credit is the greatest asset a man has, and a spendthrift, a man who lives beyond his means, is generally known mighty quick, and if he asks credit he must put up collateral, or he will be turned down. On the other hand, a man who is known to be economical, who makes something and spends less than he makes, who saves, not only in dollars and cents, but is industrious and energetic, very soon has a personal credit with his banker that enables him to pull through many a hard time and enables him to go on to success.
