How a Little Boy Was Saved.

Washington, D. C .- "When our boy was about 16 months old he broke out with a rash which was thought to be measles. In a few days he had a swelling on the left side of his neck and it was decided to be mumps. He was given medical attendance for about three weeks when the doctor said it was scrofula and ordered a salve. He wanted to innce the sore, but I would not let him and continued

THE TEST OF LOVE.

Of all the noble rivers that go boundng to the sea none is more splendid :han the Columbia. Its pineclad banks give a majestic setting for its silver stream. But why should it be called silver? At times it is the deepest green -deeper and more luminous than the heart of a jewel. There are hours when its cascades have a thousand colors, like mother-of-pearl. There are dawns, after the mist has lifted, when the broad surface of the river above the cascades is actually saffron or bur-

Barbara Merriden knew it in every mood, and loved it whether it was somber with storm, or sullen in the harsh autumn days, or scintillant under the July sunshine. She was as much at home upon the river as on the land; and the firm earth, with all give her the joy that she felt when the current took her boat in its strong em-

She went to the river in her sorrowful moments as well as in her happy ones. She fled to it as a friend. When George Caxton told her that he ward to this hour as the crowning joy of her life. But with grief she discovered that the song of nature had a higher note than the love lyric of her

Perhaps it was because the hour had been too long expected. George Caxton and Barbara Merriden had gone to school together. They knew every event of each other's lives. They had always been attached to each other. George had never thought of any other girl with emotion, and Barbara had long felt that she was destined to be his wife. She had said yes to his earnest question with gratitude and happiness, yet now, in the mystic hour by the river, with the sun shedding its last exquisite glow upon an unreal world. she felt a weariness of spirit at the moderation of her joy.

She was turning from her beautiful river, humiliated at the inadequacy of her own emotions, when she saw walking among the pines, with eyes fixed upon the distant glory of the sky, a young man whom she had never seen before. He did not see her till she was close by him, and then he looked with a start at the face of the girl, spiritual and exquisite with its deep emotional experience. He stopped and looked at her, rapt, as if she had been some recently embodied soul, created for this wondrous hour, and she stopped, too enchanted by the eloquence of his face.

When he spoke it was to say something remarkable:

"Is it always mysterious and fearfully beautiful in these woods?" he asked.

She felt sure she would meet the did, many times. He was a writer by vocation. He even confessed to being a poet. He was not well, he said. The city had worn on him. So he had come for a long rest there among the pines. His name was Cecil Underwood.

Barbara found it impossible to resist the charm of his personality. He seemed to make the whole world over for her. In vain she struggled to remember the truth and patience and strength of her betrothed. He was too well known to her to be seen through a glamor. With austere serenity he insisted upon an early marriage day. cried out:

"The rapids, Barbara! The rapids! See where you have taken us!" She glanced behind her. It was true that the tossing white mane of the water horse was not more than half a mile away and the boat was quivering in the pull of their great power. Barbara smiled a little-it would not matter to her so much, she reflected, if her great problem were to be solved that way. But still, it was cowardly to die. She set her fine young strength to a resistance, rowing up stream, and inclining the boat toward the southern shore. So absorbed was she in this

Barbara bent to her heavy task and made, by means of brave efforts, a little headway. But the wild river horses plunged on and dragged her at their heels. She was almost on the verge of yielding to their relentless strength when a boat shot out from the bank. It came toward her quaking skiff with magnificent momentum. Barbara recognized the occupant at once. It was George Caxton. A hideous humiliation filled her soul. She was almost tempted to yield to that tugging of the wild horses. She looked at the half-fainting, praying creature beside her, and then at the approaching man. And a moment of Gethsemane came to her. Then, white and courageous, she renewed her efforts. A moment later a line was thrown to her. She made it secure. Then she in her boat and George Caxton in his began a struggle which they soon conquered. George helped the trembling Cecil to shore, but Barbara leaped lightly to land and stood there smiling strangely. "I am thankful with a great thankfulness that I owe my life to you, George," she said. "It is a privilege." She held out her hand to the other

"Good-by," she whispered.

"Pity me! Pity me!" he cried. "I do," she responded. "Good-by." He went slowly under the pines, walking feebly like a man who is old and ill. George looked after him with commiserating eyes, but Barbara was relentless.

"Give me your arm," she said, with tender graciousness, "we will walk home together, George."-Chicago Tribune.

Austrian Centenarians.

In search of centenarians in Austria the Tageblatt of Vienna has discovered nine. In Vienna only one woman, who is named Kulla, is older than 100. The oldest on the list for all Austria is Amelie Ringer, who lieves in a village near Bielitz, in Silesia. She is nearly 115, and reads without spectacles. The next is Anna Welzl, aged 103.
