President Wilson, in an article in the July number of the World's Work, makes this statement—"If America discourages the locality, the community, the self contained towns, she will kill the nation." Many of these self-contained towns are losing in population, are going backward, while the great cities are growing by leaps and bounds.

In the article above referred to, President Wilson adds - "You consists of. Its vitality does not lie in New York, nor in Chicago, it will never be sapped by anything that happens in Saint Louis.

Nearly every city, great and small, every town large and little, sprang into existence as a trading center, as a place for the exchange of commodies and thus became, not only the commercial, but the social center of the people of the country tributary to it. When a town becomes a great city, it ceases to furnish to the people of the adjacent country the social side of their lives, for the art of being a good neighbor is a lost one with a majority of the people in the large commercial centers.

The automobile, the interurban, the long distance telephone are all bringing the large cities nearer and nearer to an ever increasing number of people. These great centers have in them a lure for the folks of the smaller communities, of the less pretentions trading points. The great city is a vortex into which is drawn the very life blood of our nation. People who cannot go to it to make their homes are wont to like to trade with its stores. Human nature is very much the same the world over. Distance lends enchantment. Kansas City likes to shop in Chicago, while Chicago folks are inclined to buy more or less from the stores in New York, and many a woman purchases gowns in Paris which can be duplicated in staid old Philadelphia for less money.

something to say regarding the the towns that will hold their own, and will grow and continue to be potent factors in the life of the people in and around them.
