Labor Saving Murdering Methods

Last week the Democrat talked about the labor saving methods now employed in murdering men in modern warfare. Since then the whole system of war-murder has been amplified. It is not necessary now to even shoot them. A Frenchman named Turpine has produced a plan that is yet shrouded in mystery. But it does the work. It is a machine in its death dealing methods. It is named after its inventor, or discoverer, and is known as turpinite. It is shot from a gun in the shape of a shell and explodes. When it explodes it scatters the turpinite in all directions and the person who comes in the slightest contact with it is instantly dead. It paralyzes the heart and causes instant death. Where these shells of turpinite have been used, men were found standing upright, with their guns extended in their hands in the act of taking aim, dead. There is no wounding and mangled in this method. It is quite a humane method of killing your neighbor. He doesn't know anything about it. One instant he is there on his morder-job and the next instant one isn't any further account to friend or foe. We have read that the terrible war-machines now in operation are so death-dealing that they will be the means of bringing about world peace, but if the sharpnel guns, and tyddite, and Zeppelins, are not capable of bringing civilization back to earth, surely turpinite ought to have the desired effect. — Kearney Democrat.
