Our esteemed contemporary, the Hastings Democrat, intimates that the Lincoln Journal is working its head off to induce the democrats to place a prohibition plank in its national platform in 1916. The efforts of the Lincoln Journal are unnecessary. Mr. Bryan will attend to that, and of course, the Hastings Democrat will favor such a plank when it comes from Mr. Bryan. Even Edgar Howard will have to take his June hat off and throw it into the air as an evidence that he still loves Mr. Bryan. Mr. Bryan must see that such a plank is placed at the very top of the next democratic national platform or it will discredit his recent declaration that he is for prohibition and is going to make the fight of his life for its accomplishment. Is the Hastings Democrat going in help hold Mr. Bryan's hands up to his great battle for prohibition? Now is the time to speak, and speak plainly.—Kearney Democrat.

At 181 pounds, Tom McCarthy of Ravenna easily defeated Terry Keller, the Californian, in ten rounds at Brown's "Gym" in New York last week Wednesday night. The coast fighter tipped the beam at 175. The win was McCarthy's fifth since he made his bow there weeks ago.

A Warning to Mothers

A few evenings ago one of the young mothers of Ord sent her 8-year-old child down to the market for some meat, as she had been in the habit of doing. In due time the child returned home on a run and in a much perturbed state of mind. With much concern the mother heard the child's recital of her experience, which is as follows:

The child says that on the way to the market she was accosted by a middle-aged man, who asked her where she was going, being told her errand he said he would go along with her. As she approached the market the man sat down on the First National Bank steps and awaited her return.

Young as the girl was she did not like the attentions of the stranger and was not a little put out that he persisted in following her. To get rid of him she decided to go to the postoffice, but this ruse did not shake him. The man attempted to make himself familiar with the child and stopped at several of the store windows and offered to buy her a doll and talked freely about the displays. The child remembered the story of the ill-fated Goldia Williams of Grand Island and refused his offers and attempted to break away from him, not feeling, however, that she dared to run from him.

At the Dwork corner the man proposed that she go with him to the depot, where he said he was going to see at what time his train was to go, as he said he was going to Burwell. She refused. Then he urged her to go, saying they would come back and then he would take her through the court house and show her all over the building. She refused with increased vehemence, saying that her mama wanted her to return at once. Then he wanted her to go with him part way to the depot, and when she positively refused and tried to break away he spoke commandingly to her but she sped down the street to her home and made her escape.

Doubtless the man would not have dared to lay violent hands on her while in any prominent street of the city, but it is equally true that his conduct pointed to base designs, and that if he could have led her away to a secluded spot consequences too terrible to contemplate would have ensued.

The mother in relating this story to us said that she did not wish her name or the child's to be given for she did not wish to have the child subjected to the inquiries that would naturally come to her were she was known as the victim of this circumstances. But she wished the facts given to the public as a warning to mothers. She feels that the story of Goldia Williams, which she had familiarized the child with, helped the little girl to realize her danger and possibly kept her from harm. At any rate with the story in her little mind she was safe-guarded much more than she otherwise would have been.

She thinks that mothers will do well to keep their children posted on the dangers awaiting them, not only of this nature but of kindred dangers, and the best way to do this is to tell the child of evils that have befallen others, such as the case of the unfortunate Grand Island child.—The Ord Quiz.

Swede Detective Makes Good

The play of "Ole, the Swede Detective," at the opera house last Friday night, was one of the very best and most entertaining of all comedies which have visited this city in the past. Al Markham, as "Ole," was true to life in the characterization of the lately arrived native of the old country, while his dialect was of the most refreshing kind. The Northwesterner wishes to go on record as claiming him as a close companion of Gus Hegge, the original Swedish dialect comedian, who made of "Ole Oleson" and "Yon Yonson," national wide comedies along Swedish dialect lines. Indeed, the whole cast was excellent, not a "stick" being among them.

Death of Anders P. Swanson

Anders P. Swanson, who died at his home, 1404 Thirteenth streets Aurora, on Saturday, November 28th, after a prolonged illness from Bright's disease, was born in Ostergotland, Sweden, September 9th, 1849, and had reached the age of 65 years, 2 months and 19 days. Mr. Swanson came to America in 1870 and was married to Miss Ida Melin at Galva, Ill., February 19, 1873. The family came to Aurora in 1893. Mr. Swanson worked for a time at the carpenter trade and was also employed in Vic Swanson's grocery store. Besides the widow two children are left to mourn him Mrs. E. Youngquist of Aurora and Victor Swanson of Loup City. There are seven grandchildren. Mr. Swanson was a good citizen, a devoted husband and a kind father, and had many friends who will cherish his memory. The funeral was held Monday afternoon from the Swedish Mission church in Aurora, Rev. K. A. Isaakson and Rev. N. A. Bjornstrand officiating. Burial was made in Aurora cemetery.—Aurora Republican.

Suspected of Being a Spy

Many of the friends of C. V. Svoboda around town are having a good laugh this week at his expense, incident to the report that is in circulation that he is suspected of being a German spy. Mr. Svoboda has large land holdings in Canada and recently went up there to look after his interests. Of course he never thought of taking along any evidence of his citizenship, but he wired the other day for his papers and they were hurried to him. As we get it, he said something about being suspected of being a spy. Mr. Svoboda is a fluent talker in both Bohemian and German and we can see how he might easily be suspected up in in that country where they are all the time looking for trouble since the war started. Of course he will soon get the evidence there to convince the authorities that he is a citizen of the United States.—St. Paul Republican.
