Jenkins Believed in Brevity, and All That Kind of Thing, but he Had a Sad Awakening.

Jenkins' wife was away on a visit. Now, Jenkins was a very busy man. He believed not in lengthy communications. In letter-writing, brevity was the synonym for excellence.

He loved his wife devotedly, enjoyed hearing from her often, and always devoured her brief letters with the keen appetite of an enthusiastic lover. But to wade through a long, drawnout letter of 16 pages was to him an utter waste of time and evesight.

So one day his heart danced with delight at the receipt of the following from her (a perfect gem of a thing --so short and sweet-so to the point): "M. d. l..

At the Iowa station they have found. after several years of careful experimenting, that a mixture of about fifteen parts of corn to one part of tankage makes an ideal brood sow ration, producing strong, healthy pigs at a minimum of expense, with feed prices as they generally prevail. If the farmer feeds his average sow not more than one-half pound of tankage daily, and if he depends for the most part on a ration of about fifteen parts of corn to one part of tankage, he will get good results from tankage. He should be sure, however, that he is giving a good grade of tankage. The fertilizer grade of tankage, when fed to sows, often produces bad results.
