Rev. Slocumb exhibited a freak potato vine Wednesday. In addition to the regular offspring of spuds from the roots this enterprising plant hatched out a bunch of small potatoes on the vine. Rev. Slocumb now has a dream of out-classing Luther Burbank by producing a potato plant that will eliminate the old back-breaking process of digging tubers and allow them to be picked from a step-ladder.

Wednesday the passenger was late, made so we are told by an exciting episode. Two horses down near Farwell got on the tracks ahead of the train and no amount of tooting could make them leave it, and finally both animals ran onto a bridge going partly through. By the aid of the train men and nearly all the passengers they were hoisted out of their disagreeable plight, dragged across the bridge by ropes, and expelled from the right of way by force, allowing the choo choo to proceed.—Ashton Herald.
