That I will climb the ladder of good fellowship without treading on the rungs of intemperance.

That I will at all times give the devil his due, and that I will be equally just with my friends.

That should I have an opportunity to lend a heloing hand to a fallen brother, I will make the loan, and

The gentleman, who objects to us making a personal item of his call, as he was not looking for publicity, says he also has been a reader of the Northwestern from its initial number down to the present, which according to the volume and number given, is 24 years and over, and while he is willing to divide honors insists he is just as old a reader as any, and as he laid down one of Uncle Sam's cartwheels, added, "And here's for another year in advance, and expect to take the paper as long as it is published, and you remain good." Meeting such substantial friends of the paper does an editor a world of good, and we trust the gentleman will live to celebrate the century mark on life's troubled seas and not have to weather a storm of any consequence. And by the way.

We would like to have the mame and processed gorgeously in the old, native riding costume, and dashing about in two sand threes and groups. In the afternoon Mrs. London and I stood in the judges' stand and awarded the prizes for horsemanship and costume to the pau riders. All about were the hundreds of lepers, with wreaths of flowers on heads and necks and shoulders, looking on and making merry. And always, over the brows of hills and across the grassy level stretches, appearing and disappearing, were the groups of men and women, gaily dressed, on galloping horses, horses and riders flower bedecked and flower garlanded, singing and laughing and riding like the wind. And as I stood in the judges' stand and looked at all this, there came to my recollection the lazar house of Havana, where I once beheld some two hundred lepers, prisoners inside four restricted walls

December 25th was observed in a double sense at the home of Mrs. Abbie Gilbert. Besides the usual Christmas cheer it was the occasion of a jubilee over her restoration of of a jubilee over her restoration of sight and her return home after an absence of over five months. Both the weather and the occasion were conducive to the pleasure of the twenty-three guests present. It would be a task indeed to try to mention the good things with which the table was bountifully spread. A most prominent feature of the gathering was the meeting of three sisters and their brother, who had not all been together in nearly forty years. They are, Mr. Walter Moon, Loup City; Mrs. Pheobe McIntire, La Porte, Iowa; Mrs. Abbie Gilbert, Loup City, and Mrs. Lucy M. Hartman of St. Joseph, Mo. The other guests were: Judge and Mrs. Angier, Dr. and Mrs. A. S. Main, Mrs. Knowlton, Mr. and That I will do better.
