IT WAS NEW TO GOTHAMITES

Promoter's Champagne Dinner in Western Style Made a Stir.

The champagne dinner is an old device of the stock salesman in the west, but it seems to have been somewhat overlooked hereabouts, says a New York dispatch to the Cincinnati Times-Star. At any rate, one dinner given in one of the exclusive clubs given in one of the exclusive clubs in town has made so much stir in the brokerage circles that you'd think the blanche to get up the best dinner he knew how to cook.

And champagne! Champagne didn't flow; it came in a cloudburst. The host made a brief speech, telling how the mining industry of the west was flourishing, and hinting delicately at his own tremendous success. Then other speakers got up and talked along the same line, closing by brief congratulations to the host upon his fortune. When every one was fairly well pickled the host rose again and made a spread-eagle speech. Finally, as though overcome by the good fellowship of the occasion, he declared that he couldn't see so many of the proper sort outside the breasted works. "I'm going to take you boys in, every one of you, right on the ground floor!" he shouted. "You shall have what shares you want at the figure they cost me, and before a single share is offered to the public." He had previously told of the surpassing richness of his mine. The subscription list was passed, and practically every one present subscribed. Thousands of shares in the aggregate were disposed of. The proposition certainly did look good, and even yet the subscribing guests are well pleased with the situation, but it is an odd fact that not one of them can tell anything coherent of the mine. And you annoy any of them frightfully by indiscreet queries.

Spongy Chromium.

Chromium in a remarkably new spongy form has been produced by B. net de Jassonville by heating cast chromium containing 15 per cent. of boron in an electric furnace with a large mass of copper. The ingot shows the white, spongy metal in the midst of the copper. When the latter is dissolved out the dried residue is a brilliant, spongy mass of nearly pure chromium in the form of interlaced filaments or crystallites grouped like snowflakes or moss leaves. The small amount of boron present may be driven off by heating. The spongy chromium is attacked more easily than ordinary metal, does not oxidize in air, but in flame burns like tinder, glows very brightly in oxygen and is attacked by hydrochloric and sulphuric acid, but not by nitric acid.
